EXPLANATION

THE object in view in preparing Corpus Juris Secundum has been two-fold: First, to provide a complete encyclopedic treatment of the whole body of the law, which means that it must be based upon all the reported cases; Second, to present each title of the law in form and content most suitable as a means of practical reference for the Bench and Bar.

Corpus Juris Secundum is therefore a complete restatement of the entire body of American Law. The clear-cut and exhaustive propositions comprising the text are supported by all the authorities from the earliest times to date. The supporting case citations, conspicuously set out in the notes, point to all decisions handed down since the publication of Corpus Juris. When the searcher may wish to consult earlier authorities, a specific reference to Corpus Juris will make available all cases back to 1658.

Each title will be preceded by a complete section analysis, greatly simplified to facilitate research. Where the scope of any section is such as to require it, a more minute analysis will be found thereunder in its appropriate place within the title (see Abatement and Revival, Section 112). The convenience of this method—an innovation in encyclopedic writing—must immediately commend itself.

A concise summary, a black-letter epitome, indicative of its scope, will precede the full treatment or statement of the law under each section. These introductory summaries, concise and free from interlineation of authorities, will prove of great convenience and value in legal research.

An index will be found in the back of each volume covering the titles contained therein, thus providing another convenient means of ready access to the text and notes.

Corpus Juris Secundum will be kept to date by means of annual cumulative pocket parts for each volume. This feature of supplementation which has proved so successful in modern digests and statutes will conveniently, and with certainty, keep each title constantly to date through current cases and new precedents.

Corpus Juris Secundum represents the combined product of the highest editorial talent and manufacturing skill. Its many excellent editorial features are fittingly accompanied by corresponding innovations and improvements in mechanical arrangement, typography, and design, which the publisher believes will commend themselves to the profession as representing a new standard in legal publications.

VOLUME FOURTEEN

CASE.

As a Noun

—Ordinary, Popular Senses. It has been said that the word "case" has various meanings.²³ In ordinary phraseology, it has been held to mean event or happening, instance, occasion, situation or circumstances, and the like;²⁴ and, in particular connections, to mean chance, contingency, and condition or state of circumstances;²⁵ also party, result, and side.²⁶

In the entirely different sense of that which incloses or contains, "case" has been defined as meaning a box, covering, or sheath, of any kind; anything intended to inclose or contain something;²⁷ also a box and its contents.²⁸ Used in this sense, but always considering the particular circumstances of its use, "case" has been held to connote something substantial, as of wood or metal; useful, but not necessarily of permanent value;²⁹ and so has been held to include tin cans and stoneware receptacles.³⁰

—Technical, Legal Sense. In its legal sense, as a cause, or a state of facts which furnishes occasion for the exercise of the jurisdiction of a court of justice, the term is defined in the C.J.S. title Actions § 1 b (1); and, in a particular connection, the word has been held equivalent to, or at least coextensive with, "claim."³¹ For the use of "case" as a brief name for action on the case, see the C.J. S. title Case, Action On § 2, also 11 C.J. p 3 note 9; as a method of presentation of errors for review see the C.J.S. title Appeal and Error § 910; within a constitutional provision relating to the transfer of a case by the supreme court to another court see the C.J.S. title Courts § 348, also 15 C.J. p 1039 note 52; and within a statute conferring appellate jurisdiction on the federal circuit court of appeals see the C.J.S. title Federal Courts § 287, also 25 C.J. p 961 note 39.

Phrases: "Capital case," see Capital 12 C.J.S. p 1129 notes 29-37, "case arising from injuries to the person,"³² "case at law,"³³ "case for winding up affairs of any such bank,"³⁴ "case in equity,"³⁵ "case involving construction of the revenue laws,"³⁶ "case

§ 1. Historical

The action of case was created to supply a special form of action for particular cases wherein the ancient forms of action did not provide a remedy.

The action on the case or action of case was invented for the purpose of supplying a special form of action for particular cases where the existing writs did not apply or did not afford an adequate remedy.¹ It took its name from the fact that plaintiff in such a situation was authorized to bring a special action on his own case.² It is a remedy given by the common law, but the issuance of writs under such circumstances was sanctioned and enforced at an early date by the Statute of Westminster II, 13 Edward I chapter 24.³

§ 2. Nature and Scope of Remedy in General

In general, where there has been injury for which none of the established forms of action will lie, an action on the case may be maintained.

In general, where there exists a legal right on one side and a legal wrong on the other, accompanied by damages, the action of case will furnish a remedy where no specific remedy exists,⁴ and it may be defined as a form of action devised to cover all cases of this nature.⁵ It is a suppletory personal action⁶ founded on the mere justice and conscience of plaintiff's right to recover in the nature of a bill in equity,⁷ and it is peculiarly adapted to the redress of injuries arising from any new relation in which the parties may be placed by the varying changes in society and business, whether arising from statutory provisions or otherwise;⁸ hence it is no objection that there is no precedent for a particular action of this nature.⁹ On the other hand it has been held that case will not lie where plaintiff can have adequate redress by any of the forms of action known and practiced.¹⁰

To support an action on the case, there must be an actionable wrong and consequent injury,¹¹ but it is not necessary that the act complained of involve any moral turpitude¹² or benefit to defendant.¹³

In its most comprehensive signification an action on the case includes assumpsit as well as an action in form ex delicto,¹⁴ although in modern times it is, as is noted in the title Actions § 34, ordinarily understood as meaning an action in the latter form.

The distinctions between the action on the case and other forms of action are considered in the title Actions § 36 d, where also, in § 39, is considered the effect of code and other statutory provisions abolishing the common-law forms of action.

The action on the case is often referred to as "case,"¹⁵ or "trespass on the case,"¹⁶ and it was originally called "special action on the case."¹⁷

§ 3. Direct or Consequential Nature of Injury

An action on the case will not ordinarily lie for the direct consequences of a tort unless no force was present.

While an action on the case will lie to recover damages for torts which are not committed with force,¹⁸ or for tortious damages occasioned by force where the injury is not direct or immediate but is consequential,¹⁹ ordinarily trespass is the proper remedy for a tort committed with force, the direct and immediate consequence of which is the injury complained of, as is discussed in C.J.S. title Trespass § 58, also 63 C.J. p 965 note 98; but, as is stated in the title Actions § 36 d, it has been held in some cases that plaintiff may waive the trespass and bring case for consequential damages notwithstanding the injury is direct. Whether case or trespass should be resorted to in an action for negligent injury is discussed in C.J.S. title Negligence § 176, also 45 C.J. p 1046 notes 98-3.

An injury is to be regarded as consequential where it arises after the act has been completed al-

§ 4. Injury Common to All

Plaintiff must have sustained injury other than that common to all.

Case cannot be sustained where the injury is alike common to all, and where no right peculiar to the party has been affected.²²

§ 5. Particular Grounds of Action and Defenses

- a. Breach of duty imposed by contract
- b. Enforcement of statutory rights
- c. Injury to incorporeal rights
- d. Injury or diminution of value of lien
- e. Injuries to realty
- f. Defenses

a. Breach of Duty Imposed by Contract

An action on case may be maintained for a tortious breach of duty arising out of contract.

In general, where an action is based entirely on the breach of the terms of a contract between the parties, and involves no element of tort, case will not lie;²³ but where the duty is imposed by the contract or grows out of it by a legal implication and injury results from the violation or disregard of that duty, an action on the case may be maintained.²⁴ In the latter case the contract is mere inducement and the tort arising from the breach of the duty is the gravamen of the action.²⁵ An action on the case also may often be a better remedy for a breach of a common-law duty which has been a subject of contractual relations.²⁶

The duty violated may arise out of an express or implied contract,²⁷ and it is not necessary that the contract relate to a business affected with a public interest.²⁸

This rule permits an action on the case to be brought against attorneys for their negligence, as discussed in the title Attorney and Client § 155, and surgeons and physicians for ignorance and want of skill in the treatment of a patient, as shown in C.J.S. title Physicians and Surgeons § 57, also 48 C.J. p 1138 note 61, and the principle has been extended to the unskillful performance of other contracts requiring a high degree of skill.²⁹

Money had and received. Case will not lie where the breach of duty complained of is defendant's refusal to turn over to plaintiff money received by the former for the latter's use. Assumpsit is the only remedy.³⁰ On the other hand, where one received money in specie, simply for safe-keeping, to be redelivered on demand and converted it to his own use, it was held that there was a breach of his duty to redeliver the specific money, which supported an action on the case.³¹

In the absence of provision of another remedy, case may be employed to enforce a statutory right.

Where a statute creates a cause of action and provides that the remedy shall be in case, case will lie therefor,³² and where the statute merely imposes a duty or liability without providing any remedy, an action on the case will lie if appropriate to the character of the injury.³³ Where, however, the statute prescribes a remedy other than case for the enforcement of a right or liability created by the statute case will not lie, although independent of the statute it would be the appropriate form of remedy,³⁴ unless, under the circumstances the statutory remedy is inadequate³⁵ or unavailable.³⁶

Case is the proper remedy to recover a tax under a statute,³⁷ or for damages for the taking of property under an act alleged to be unconstitutional.³⁸

As a rule, case is not the remedy under a penal statute.³⁹ It may, however, be brought when the party seeks to recover for special damages occasioned by the breach of a penal statute.⁴⁰

c. Injury to Incorporeal Rights

Case is an appropriate remedy for an injury to an incorporeal right.

Where the right or property injured is intangible and incapable of manual possession, case is the appropriate remedy,⁴¹ since such property is impossible of manual possession and hence physical force cannot be applied to it.⁴²

d. Injury or Diminution of Value of Lien

Wrongful injury or diminution of the value of property subject to a lien may support an action on the case by the lienholder.

As stated in Corpus Juris, which statement has been quoted and cited with approval, where plaintiff has a lien on the property injured, he may maintain an action on the case, where the injuries complained of diminish the value of his security or operate to make it ineffectual,⁴³ on the theory that the wrong is done to property of which plaintiff has neither the possession nor the right to possession, and, since trespass, detinue, or trover will not lie, the law will afford a remedy for the injury by an action on the case.⁴⁴ This includes actions by mortgagees,⁴⁵ or landlords having a lien on the property injured.⁴⁶

e. Injuries to Realty

Case will lie for consequential injuries to real property or injury by one lawfully thereon.

An action on the case is the proper remedy for consequential injuries to real property,⁴⁷ and proof of possession is not essential to a recovery.⁴⁸ So, when defendant does some act on his own land which results in an injury to the land or other property of an adjoining owner, case may be maintained.⁴⁹ Case is also the only remedy where the injury is done on plaintiff's land by one who has the right of entry thereon.⁵⁰

Reversionary interest. For an injury to property which affects its reversionary value, and in which plaintiff has only a reversionary interest, case is the appropriate remedy.⁵¹ Thus, case is the landlord's remedy for injury to the reversion when a tenant is in possession for a fixed and unexpired term.⁵²

f. Defenses

Matters tending to show the absence or discharge of the alleged duty are available as a defense. Coverture is not a defense.

In order for a matter to constitute a defense, it must be sufficient to negative plaintiff's right to recover. Accordingly, when parties by an express agreement assume the performance of an obligation which, aside from the agreement, the law implies, whatever will in law excuse a breach of the express obligation will, in an action on the case for breach of the implied obligation, be a defense thereto.⁵³ The defense of contributory negligence to an action on the case for damages for neglect to perform an obligation arising out of contract must be based on plaintiff's obligation under the contract or its incidents, and plaintiff's negligence must be a proximate cause of defendant's breach, and hence must occur before or concurrently with such breach.⁵⁴ Coverture, however, is not a defense, as the action is in form ex delicto.⁵⁵

§ 6. Jurisdiction and Venue

In the absence of statutory permission, an action on case cannot be brought in a court of inferior jurisdiction. The usual rules as to venue apply.

In some jurisdictions, an action on the case cannot be brought before a court of inferior jurisdiction, but must be brought in a higher court.⁵⁶

As pointed out in C.J.S. title Venue § 8, also 67 C.J. p 25 note 27–p 26 note 32, the test as to whether an action is transitory or local lies in the nature of the subject of injury. If the transaction on which the action is founded could have taken place anywhere, the action is generally regarded as transitory; but when the cause of action could only have arisen in a particular place, the action is local. Accordingly, where an action on the case arises from an injury to real property, it is a local action,⁵⁷ and in the absence of a statute to the contrary the venue must be laid in the county in which the cause of action arose.⁵⁸ Where the injury is either to personal rights or to personal property, it is a transitory action and may be brought wherever the court can obtain jurisdiction of the parties.⁵⁹

§ 7. Time to Sue

An action on the case must be brought within the time limited by statute.

The time within which an action on the case may be brought, under statutes of limitations of general application, is considered in C.J.S. title Limitations of Actions § 73, also 37 C.J. p 772 notes

In Texas

(1) Under a statute providing that no inhabitant of the state shall be sued outside the county of his domicile except where "the foundation of the suit is some crime or offense or trespass for which a civil action in damages may lie, in which case the suit may be brought in the county where . . . the trespass was committed," the word "trespass" includes actions of trespass on the case.—Page v. Schlortt, Civ.App., 71 S.W.2d 836—11 C.J. p 11 note 33.

(2) So, an action of trespass on the case may be brought in the county where the trespass was committed or where defendant had his domicile.—Hill v. Kimball, 13 S.W. 59, 76 Tex. 210, 7 L.R.A. 618. 11 C.J. p 11 note 30 [a].

19-27. Where a declaration sets forth a cause of action for which case is the appropriate remedy, a particular limitation applicable to actions on the case will be applied.⁶⁰ A statute requiring all special actions on the case, for criminal conversation, assault and battery, and false imprisonment, to be brought within one year after the cause of action accrues, refers only to the specific actions designated and not to all special actions on the case.⁶¹

§ 8. Persons Entitled to Sue and Person Liable; Parties

Rules of general application control as to the persons entitled to sue and the parties to action on the case.

In accordance with the usual rules governing parties plaintiff, as discussed in C.J.S. title Parties § 6, also 47 C.J. p 22 note 25, an action on the case for the enforcement of a right must be in the name of the person having the legal title.⁶² So, where property is destroyed by fire, the owner and lessor is a proper party in an action on the case for the recovery of the value thereof.⁶³ In some jurisdictions, an assignor of a part of a claim for damages may maintain an action on the case.⁶⁴

In accordance with the usual rules as to joinder of parties plaintiff in civil actions, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Parties §§ 17-29, also 49 C.J. p 53 note 70-p 66 note 55, where a wrong constitutes a direct as well as a consequential injury to land in the possession of a life tenant, the latter may waive the trespass and join with the remainderman in an action on the case for the recovery of the consequential damages sustained by him.⁶⁵

Defendants. Where two or more have jointly committed an injury which is in itself a tort, or where the liability sought to be enforced does not originate in a contract, or is not so declared on, plaintiff may at his option sue one, or join as defendants all or some, of those who committed the alleged injury.⁶⁶ Where the liability as set forth in the declaration is obviously founded on contract, but the injury complained of is in its character a tort, plaintiff may sue one or more of those liable.⁶⁷ However, where a breach of contract is the gravamen of the action and the contract is material, all jointly liable thereon must be joined.⁶⁸

(1) In General

The ordinary rules, more particularly those of common-law pleading, apply to the requisites and sufficiency of the declaration, which must clearly state a cause of action.

The requisites and sufficiency of a declaration in an action on the case depend generally on the particular circumstances on which the action is founded, and reference should be made to the titles which deal with the particular torts for which the action is brought.

The distinguishing characteristic of an action on the case seems to be that all the facts on which plaintiff relies must be stated in his declaration.⁶⁹

The name given to the declaration or writ by plaintiff is not conclusive as to the form of the ac-

Statements injurious to reputation
Whether cause of action based on statements injurious to reputation and character was one for slander or was an action on the case, statement of cause of action by clear and distinct averments was required. The petition should clearly state character of suit and place court in possession of alleged slanderous matter with such innuendoes as are necessary to explain its meaning, and a petition, alleging that deputy sheriff's character and reputation had been damaged by sheriff's statements that he had discharged deputy for incompetency, inability, insubordination, immorality, and general misconduct, was insufficient, where no attempt was made to set out or detail substance of any of statements made by sheriff and it was not alleged wherein statements were false.—Murray v. Harris, Tex.Civ. App., 112 S.W.2d 1091, error dismissed.

tion, but such question is to be determined from the nature of the wrong alleged and the character of the relief sought.⁷⁰ For instance, if the declaration sets forth a contract as mere inducement, but the gravamen of the action is a tort connected with the contract, the declaration will be construed as one in case.⁷¹

By way of inducement, opening the way to a statement of the gravamen of the action, the declaration may set forth a contract between plaintiff and defendant,⁷² or any matter which in itself would afford no ground of action or cause of complaint.⁷³ So, plaintiff may allege facts which in themselves constitute a trespass, where they constitute only a part of his cause of action.⁷⁴

Actions on statutes. Where plaintiff declares on a statute which does not prescribe the form of declaration or give directions with regard thereto, his declaration should be drawn as at common law,⁷⁵ stating all the facts on which plaintiff relies,⁷⁶ and all circumstances essential to support the action.⁷⁷ Further, where a statute prescribes a remedy by way of an action on the case, whether the declaration therein should be in form assumpsit or in tort is to be determined from the nature of the facts to be stated and established to make out the cause of action.⁷⁸

It is not necessary or advisable to recite a public statute, as a misrecital may sometimes be fatal; it is only necessary to state facts which bring plaintiff's case within the provisions of the statute and generally to refer to it.⁷⁹

Conclusion. The declaration should conclude "to the damage of the plaintiff," and the sum named should be sufficient to cover the real demand,⁸⁰ since, as will be hereinafter discussed in § 11, greater damages cannot be recovered than plaintiff has laid in the conclusion of his declaration. It is not an objection to a count in case that the form of the conclusion is in debt and not in case,⁸¹ but lack of an ad damnum clause in a declaration is an omission of matter of substance, and cannot be disregarded on a demurrer to the declaration.⁸²

Duplicity. A declaration in case stating facts constituting more than one cause of action against defendant is not bad for duplicity, unless plaintiff relies on each of them as a distinct ground of recovery.⁸³

Amendment. In order to cure imperfections and mistakes in the manner of stating plaintiff's case, particular allegations in the declaration may be changed by amendment, and other allegations added, provided the identity of the cause of action is preserved, and the form of the action is not changed.⁸⁴ It has also been held that plaintiff may amend his declaration so as to change the form of the action to an action on the case, where the amendment does not change the cause of action.⁸⁵

(2) Description of Subject of Injury

The subject of the injury should be described in the declaration with reasonable definiteness.

In an action on the case for damages to realty, the place where the acts complained of were done is material and traversable,⁸⁶ and allegations thereof must, either by the name of the land or close, or in some other way, designate or describe such place with a reasonable degree of definiteness, or the declaration will be bad on demurrer.⁸⁷

Where the subject matter of the injury is personal property, a description of the quality, quantity, number, and value may be given in general terms.⁸⁸

Where the subject matter of the tort is in reversion, the declaration must charge that the act complained of was done to the damage of the reversion,⁸⁹ or must state an injury of such a permanent nature as to be necessarily injurious thereto.⁹⁰ It is not sufficient that the injury complained of might be of such a permanent nature as to affect the reversion.⁹¹

(3) Statement of Plaintiff's Interest

Where not implied by law, plaintiff's right, interest, or title infringed should be alleged.

Plaintiff's right, interest, or title infringed should be generally or particularly alleged, at least where it is not implied by law.⁹² In actions on the case for damage it is an established rule that plaintiff's right or interest in such property should be stated according to the facts,⁹³ but it is a well recognized practice to state it in the least definite manner conceivable.⁹⁴

Where the injury was to real property in possession of plaintiff, it is sufficient to state that plaintiff was possessed of the land at the time of the injury,⁹⁵ and his rights and interests are matters of evidence only.⁹⁶ In other words, if the action is for consequential injuries to real property in plaintiff's possession, title need not be alleged in plaintiff, since possession is sufficient to sustain the action.⁹⁷ Where the tort consisted in an injury to goods, an averment that they were the goods "of the plaintiff," or that he "was lawfully possessed" of them, sufficiently alleges plaintiff's right to them or interest in them, either absolutely or to a limited extent.⁹⁸ Where the injury was in respect of an incorporeal hereditament appurtenant to land or houses, it is sufficient in an action against a stranger to the title to allege that at the time of the commission of the injury plaintiff was possessed of a house or land, and that by reason of such possession he was entitled to some easement in the exercise of which he was disturbed.⁹⁹ Where plaintiff's right is not possessory, but in reversion, his specific interest must be expressly stated in the declaration according to the facts, because, not being in possession, his damages cannot be known except by a direct description of his title and the injury received.¹

Where the right of plaintiff arises from an obligation by defendant to observe some duty, the nature of the duty must be stated, whether it is based on an express contract between the parties or on an implication of law, and the allegations must clearly show that, either by express contract or by implication of law, defendant was compelled to do or refrain from doing the act regarding which he is sought to be held liable.²

Where the injury arises from the breach of an obligation imposed on defendant by reason of an express or implied contract, it is imperative to refrain from laying a promise as if the action were in assumpsit,³ but the contract should be correctly set forth as an inducement to the statement and description of the wrong or injury done.⁴ It is not necessary to state the contract formally unless it

Action by landlord

A declaration by a landlord, in an action on the case for an injury to the land while in the possession of a tenant, is bad where it alleges an injury to the property generally and neither limits the complaint to an injury done to plaintiff's reversionary estate and interest in the property nor avers that there was any injury to that estate or interest.—Rowland v. constitutes a material part of plaintiff's case,⁵ nor is it necessary, when the injury was caused by a misfeasance or a malfeasance, to state formally or substantially the consideration of the contract,⁶ although, where the nonfeasance of defendant is the cause of the damage done to plaintiff by the breach of contract, its consideration should be so stated.⁷ It is necessary to set forth only so much of the contract as is requisite to establish plaintiff's right of action and to render the statement of his case intelligible,⁸ omitting those matters which are not a necessary part of the case, and that do not affect those matters which are necessary.⁹

For the breach of a duty imposed by law and not connected with, or dependent on, a contract, plaintiff must aver the facts on which the duty arose.¹⁰ However, an express allegation of a duty is not essential, since if the facts stated raise the duty, an express allegation is unnecessary,¹¹ and if the facts stated do not raise the duty, an express allegation of duty is immaterial.¹² As a general rule, it is sufficient to allege the facts out of which the duty arose, and that defendant failed to perform such duty.¹³ Where the liability arises from the nature of defendant's employment, it is necessary only to state succinctly what the situation of defendant was that caused the duty and the liability to arise,¹⁴ and it is not necessary to state or to prove that any contract existed between the parties.¹⁵

(4) Statement of Injury

The declaration must contain a sufficient allegation of the wrong or breach of duty giving rise to the injury complained of.

Where plaintiffs show generally and comprehensively a right in themselves, an injury by defendants, and a loss sustained by them in consequence, it is as a rule sufficient.¹⁶ The facts alleged in the declaration, except where the action is brought on a statute, should show clearly and distinctly that some tort and not a mere breach of contract has been committed,¹⁷ and must sufficiently state such facts as show an invasion of the legal right of plaintiff with a proper allegation of injury, or the invasion of such a right that the law implies some resulting injury.¹⁸ It should set forth a breach of duty imposed on defendant by contract¹⁹ or the breach of an obligation of law which defendant owed to plaintiff.²⁰ It should distinctly appear from the allegations that the injury followed consequentially and did not arise directly from the acts of defendant.²¹

The injury should not be stated as having been committed vi et armis; but a declaration that is good in every respect, except in the use of the words "with force and arms," is not affected by their wrongful use and is aided by verdict where defendant is not deprived of any advantage by their use.²² Also, these words may be construed as surplusage,²³ or if necessary the declaration may be amended.²⁴

24. Me.—Matthews v. Treat, 75 Me. 594.

A general averment of the wrongful act or injury is sufficient, as a rule, without a detailed statement of the means by which it was effected.²⁵

Whereas or wherefore. It does not seem necessary to make a direct averment, but the statement of the injury may be by way of recital, as by the use of the words, "whereas" or "wherefore;" nor are such modes of expression open to objection.²⁶

Illegality of act. Where the act or omission complained of was not prima facie actionable, it should be stated that the act was done wrongfully;²⁷ or some equivalent averment must be used,²⁸ and the facts showing the unlawfulness must be set out.²⁹

Motive or intent. Where the act or omission complained of is not prima facie actionable, because indifferent in itself, the intent with which it was done becomes material and requires, as do all substantive matters of fact, a specific allegation thereof.³⁰ In such a case, it is sufficient if it is stated substantially in accordance with the facts of the case.³¹ However, where the act occasioning the damage is itself unlawful, without any other extrinsic circumstances, the malicious intent of the wrongdoer is immaterial, and no allegation thereof is necessary.³²

Scienter. Where, in order to enable plaintiff to recover for an injury, it is necessary that defendant should have had knowledge of certain facts, such knowledge on his part must be pleaded with sufficiency.³³ However, where a scienter should be, but is not, averred, the defect is a purely technical one, and a complaint may be amended without introducing a new cause of action.³⁴

Time. An exact statement of the time at which the injury was committed is not as a rule requisite, and where it is possible that it could have been committed on several days, it may be laid as having been committed on a specified day and on divers other days and times between that day and the commencement of the suit. Where, however, a special period is assigned by means of a continuando, it becomes matter of description and not merely a formal allegation of time.³⁵

(5) Averments as to Damages

Special as distinguished from general damages must be pleaded.

Allegations of damages that are implied or presumed to have accrued in consequence of the wrong complained of need not be made;³⁶ but the fact that the plaintiff gratuitously undertakes to enumerate some portions of his general damage will not preclude his also proving other general damage.³⁷ On the other hand, if the damages sustained have not necessarily resulted from the act complained of, and therefore are not implied by law, plaintiff must allege the particular or special damages sustained and meant to be relied on at the trial;³⁸ but any illegal claim of special damage is mere surplusage.³⁹

Matter in aggravation. In cases where it is not requisite to allege defendant's knowledge of certain facts, or his malice, yet where such knowledge, or a spirit of ill will, a desire to injure, or to gratify revenge, existed, and can be proved, it may be advisable to allege such matter in aggravation of damages; but since such a statement is not necessary to enable plaintiff to recover, it need not be proved.⁴⁰ which is merely a denial or traverse of the facts alleged.⁴² Non assumpsit is not a proper plea.⁴³ A plea of the general issue, framed in case, and pleaded jointly to counts in case and trespass, is irregular.⁴⁴

Special pleas or answers must sufficiently meet the declaration.⁴⁵ A special plea which alleges an accounting but shows no satisfaction is bad.⁴⁶

c. Issues and Proof

(1) In general

(2) Under general issue

(1) In General

The pleadings and proof must correspond.

The pleading and the proof must correspond,⁴⁷ and this rule is not affected by statutes abolishing the distinctions between the forms of actions in trespass and in case.⁴⁸ To recover, plaintiff must prove the material averments of the declaration.⁴⁹ The acts or omissions of defendant, which are insisted on as a tortious violation of the duty imposed by his contract, must be proved as alleged;⁵⁰ but plaintiff need not prove each and every allegation of the declaration, since it is sufficient to prove enough of the allegations to establish a cause of action.⁵¹

Where plaintiff has gone out of his way to particularize and state in detail his title or interest instead of contenting himself with a general statement thereof and there is a misdescription, the variance will be fatal, unless it is matter that can be regarded as merely surplusage which may be rejected.⁵²

Where it is requisite to set out a contract by way of inducement to plaintiff's right, a material variance between the allegation of the contract as stated and the proof adduced in support thereof will be fatal,⁵³ the rule governing being the same as in assumpsit;⁵⁴ and although unnecessary details stated in connection with the contract must be proved as alleged, yet the proof of more than is stated will not occasion a fatal variance.⁵⁵

(2) Under General Issue

Under the general issue defendant may make any defense which tends to show that plaintiff has no cause of action.

Subject to the qualifications hereinafter stated, the general issue in an action on the case puts in issue every essential fact alleged in the declaration, including plaintiff's right to maintain the action.⁵⁶ Under it defendant may not only contest the truth of the declaration, but make any defenses that tend to show that plaintiff has no right of action,⁵⁷ although such defenses are in confession and avoidance of the declaration.⁵⁸ Thus, defendant may offer evidence of a release,⁵⁹ license,⁶⁰ justification,⁶¹ former recovery,⁶² compromise,⁶³ satisfaction,⁶⁴ accord and satisfaction,⁶⁵ mitigation of damages⁶⁶ or a matter of defense arising after the commencement of the suit.⁶⁷

On the other hand, matters of inducement in a declaration are not traversed by a plea of the general issue.⁶⁸ Also, the statute of limitations cannot be urged as a defense under such a plea,⁶⁹ nor can a breach of warranty,⁷⁰ or title in defendant to a right of way claimed to have been obstructed,⁷¹ be urged under the general issue.

Under rules of court in some jurisdictions, the plea of not guilty in an action on the case operates as a denial only of the breach of duty or wrongful act alleged to have been committed by defendant, and not of the facts stated in the inducement, and no defence other than such denial is admissible under that plea.⁷²

The rules of evidence applicable to civil actions generally apply to actions on the case.

In accordance with the rules governing civil actions generally, in case plaintiff has the burden of proving the material allegations in his declaration. Thus, in case for damages sustained by the carelessness of defendant the burden of showing negligence is on plaintiff. Where, however, a wrong or omission is proved from which damages result, proof of the wrong implies a neglect requiring an explanation from defendants.⁷³ In the absence of facts giving rise to a presumption of accident or simple negligence the presumption is that the acts set forth in the declaration were done intentionally, and the fact that the declaration alleges that they were done carelessly and negligently does not necessarily imply that they were not done intentionally.⁷⁴

Admissibility. In case for damages for unlawful and violent dispossession brought by tenants against a landlord, evidence of the temper and disposition of defendant and his wife who committed the acts of violence are admissible to sustain the allegation that plaintiffs were kept out of possession by threats and violence.⁷⁵ In case for damages caused by defendants' sending out circulars and doing other acts affecting plaintiff's credit and business reputation, the proof of such acts is admissible to show the intent of defendants, and as contributing to the destruction of plaintiff's business.⁷⁶

Sufficiency. As in other civil actions, in case plaintiff must prove the material allegations in his declaration by a preponderance of the evidence, and a preponderance is sufficient.⁷⁷

§ 11. Trial, Judgment, Review, and Costs

The rules as to trial, judgment, review, and costs applicable to civil actions generally apply in actions in case.

As in other civil actions, in an action on the case disputed questions of fact are for the determination of the jury⁷⁸ under proper instructions, which should correctly state the law applicable to the case,⁷⁹ and instructions which are defective in this particular should be refused if requested.⁸⁰ Accordingly, where the leading proposition of an instruction requested is proper, but taken as a whole the instruction is defective in distinctness and clearness, the court has a right to refuse it.⁸¹

Verdict and findings. A finding which is good in substance is not vitiated because of informality.⁸² Where case is founded purely on a tort, and there are several defendants, the finding may be, as in actions of trespass vi et armis, that some of defendants are guilty and others not guilty.⁸³ Where the tort arose out of a contract which is alleged to be a joint one and there are two or more defendants, the jury must return a verdict against all or none.⁸⁴

Damages. Where all defendants have been found guilty, damages must not be assessed severally,⁸⁵ although if they are so assessed plaintiff may cure the irregularity either by entering a nolle prosequi as to one of defendants and taking judgment against the others, or by remitting the lesser damages, or by taking judgment only for the greater ones.⁸⁶

Since the action is founded on the plaintiff's title in justice and equity to receive a compensation in damages, the damages are to be estimated by the jury in view of all the circumstances of the particular case,⁸⁷ and, subject to the qualification that greater damages than plaintiff has laid in the conclusion of his declaration cannot be recovered,⁸⁸ complete recovery may be had for all damages suffered as the proximate result of the wrong.⁸⁹

Bank's deposit certificate payable on presentation and indorsed in blank, deposited in lieu of cash bail, was considered "cash."—Bingham v. Montcalm County, 232 N.W. 348, 251 Mich. 651.

11. Significance dependent on use

"In respondent's brief it is said that, 'In modern times, there is no word in the English language so pregnant with meaning as the little word "cash," used in the proper relation' and it is further said, in the same connection, that it 'contains a world of significance.' On turning however to the standard dictionaries of the English language, we find that its primary meaning is 'a box;' and that its common meaning is 'money,' and that it sometimes means 'ready money.' Accepting these definitions as probably correct, it does not seem to us that the word 'cash,' when used in the connection in which it is in this case, signifies anything."—Hooper v. Flood, 54 Cal. 218, 221.

to its availability for immediate use, it has been said that, in popular parlance, "cash" is used to refer not merely to money, but to money in hand, under full control for use in paying obligations and liabilities,¹² and has been defined as meaning money at command or in hand,¹³ either in current coin or other legal tender, or in bank bills or checks paid and received as money;¹⁴ money in the treasury;¹⁵ money on hand or subject to the owner's right of immediate possession;¹⁶ money on hand which a merchant, trader, or other person has to do business with;¹⁷ ready money.¹⁸

—Referring to Medium of Payment. With particular reference to the medium used, "cash" has been defined or employed as meaning bank bills and bank notes;¹⁹ coin;²⁰ currency;²¹ current money;²² gold and silver or its equivalent;²³ money;²⁴ specie, or its equivalent in current bills of specie paying banks;²⁵ that which circulates as money.²⁶ In this use "cash" draws a distinction between "money" and "other things of value."²⁷

—Referring to Time of Payment. With reference to the terms or time of payment, "cash" has been defined as meaning immediate payment; money paid down;²⁸ money or its equivalent paid immediately or promptly after purchasing.²⁹ Although frequently used as the antonym of "credit," it has been said that the word does not necessarily imply a payment at any particular time,³⁰ and that, in mercantile dealings, "cash" may, and usually does, permit payment in ten or thirty days.³¹

"Cash" a free, nonmortgageable asset
"Cash, qua cash, could not be mortgaged. This proposition needs little argument to sustain it. Cash is variable and shifting. Because it is a 'free asset,' it is, and properly may be, relied upon by creditors or taken into consideration when they extend credit. It must be used to pay obligations and liabilities arising out of contract or tort. It must be under full control of the corporation, else the corporation cannot do business."—American Brake Shoe & Foundry Co. v. New York Rys. Co., D.C.N.Y., 277 F. 261, 279.

In interpreting a conversation between parties to a transaction, in which the words, "if he would pay me $50 in cash, I would get out of the trade," were used, the court said: "Appellee insists that because 'he understood that the $50 was to be cash' the time of its payment was fixed. synonymous with "money;"⁶⁸ is frequently used as the antonym of "credit;"⁶⁹ and has been distinguished from "credit,"⁷⁰ "money,"⁷¹ "note,"⁷² and "securities;"⁷³ also from the phrases "book or paper" see Book 11 C.J.S. p 520 note 75, and "promise to pay."⁷⁴

—In Phrases.

Cash on hand. Money at hand ready to be used; actual cash or its equivalent, and actually on hand;⁷⁵ quick assets out of which payment can be made without delay;⁷⁶ ready money, or that which in ordinary business usage is the same thing.⁷⁷ It has been said that the phrase, as commonly used, has a broader connotation than a literal interpretation would give it,⁷⁸ and that this is so whether the phrasing is "cash on hand" or "cash in hand."⁷⁹ The phrase applies to all money readily available for use,⁸⁰ specifically to bank notes, checks, drafts, bills of exchange, certificates of deposit, or other like instruments which pass with or without indorsement from hand to hand as money, or are immediately convertible into money,⁸¹ to cash in vault,⁸² to money in a solvent bank subject to check,⁸³ to money in a bank in the form of short-time certificates of deposit bearing interest.⁸⁴ In a particular connection, it has been held to include only such cash and receipts as have been secured in the ordinary course of business,⁸⁵ and to exclude borrowed money or that procured and received upon an express promise to repay it on a day certain.⁸⁶ It has been held not to include cash items or balances due from others, even though they are good solvent credits,⁸⁷ loans to others on long time, stock of companies not intended to be sold, and other investments of like kind,⁸⁸ promissory notes,⁸⁹ or real or personal estate to be converted into cash where the conversion has not been made.⁹⁰

Copper cash. A "cash," or copper cash, is a Chinese coin, composed of copper and lead, or copper and nickel, passing by count as money in China and, in an early case, said to be the only coin used there, at that time.⁹¹

Credit in cash. An order by one person on another, to hold to the use, or at the command, of a third person, a certain sum, which means to pay the money to him; to pay over the money.⁹²

Cash advances. A term customary among merchants when they wish to restrict the meaning of the word "advances" to actual disbursements of money.²⁹

Cash discount. A deduction which the seller allows from the price at which goods are billed to the purchaser for payment of the bill within a specified time.³⁰

Cash items. In bookkeeping, items based on any actual transaction which increases or diminishes the cash on hand.³¹ In a particular connection, the phrase has been held to refer to cash in course of collection and remittance,³² and to include notes, checks, or memoranda on hand at the end of a day's work, which, for the time being, are treated as cash in order to make the books balance,³³ but, where qualified by restrictive words as in the phrase "cash item deposited in an account subject to check," to exclude a time certificate, such as a certificate of deposit forwarded for collection.³⁴ Where referring to money in course of collection and remittance, "cash items" has been held equivalent to "transitory items."³⁵ As applied to false entries by officers and agents of national banks see Banks and Banking § 646.

Cash market value. The amount of money that property would bring in the market, with a fair and reasonable time within which to procure a purchaser at the existing market value;³⁶ the fair or reasonable cash price for which property can be sold in the market;³⁷ the price property would sell for at cash sale, but not at forced sale;³⁸ the price which property would sell for in cash when offered for sale by a person desiring, but not compelled, to sell, and bought by a person desiring, but under no necessity, to buy.³⁹ The phrase implies the placing of an estimate of value on specific property, based on facts and on the opinions and estimates of persons acquainted with it.⁴⁰ "Cash market value" has been held synonymous with, or equivalent to, "actual cash market value,"⁴¹ "actual value,"⁴² "fair cash market value,"⁴³ "fair cash value,"⁴⁴ "fair market or real value,"⁴⁵ "fair market value,"⁴⁶ and "market value."⁴⁷

Cash money. A term somewhat more definite than money alone, and, in a restricted sense, meaning actual money on hand.⁴⁸ The phrase has been used in a broad and comprehensive sense, by context meaning money loaned and evidenced by notes and mortgage,⁴⁹ and money deposited in a bank and invested in a saving association.⁵⁰

Cash net profits. By context, net profits at their actual cash valuation where the increase of the business was represented by assets, whether invested in stock, machinery, or outstanding accounts.⁵¹

Cash price. The price of articles paid for in cash at the time of purchase, in distinction from the barter and credit prices.⁵²

Cash purchase. A transaction made by a payment of the purchase money on the one side, and the delivery of the thing purchased on the other,⁵³ and it has been held that it is none the less a cash purchase because a check was provisionally accepted by the seller in lieu of money.⁵⁴ It is one of the ordinary modes of purchase known to the law and to the course of business.⁵⁵

Cash reserve. Amount held in reserve to meet the contingencies of a business.⁵⁶

Cash sale. A sale for money in hand, or one for ready money, as distinguished from one on credit.⁵⁷

Cash securities. The phrase has been construed to signify bonds or negotiable instruments that are easily convertible into equivalent money; and has been distinguished from "bank deposit,"⁵⁸ which is treated generally in Banks and Banking § 273.

Cash settlement. Payment of an obligation in full in cash; sometimes called "full cash settlement."⁵⁹

Cash terms. Also referred to as "terms cash."⁶⁰ A term prima facie importing that no credit is to be given, although it may mean that the money is to be paid in a month, or in a longer or shorter time.⁶¹ It has been held that the term necessarily imports nothing more than a cash transaction as distinguished from an exchange, that it does not necessarily imply payment in advance of shipment,⁶² and that it negatives the existence of any agreement for a discount.⁶³

Cash value. Money value, the value payable in money as distinguished from a price which would be employed as the basis of an exchange;⁶⁴ the actual value;⁶⁵ the amount at which a property would be appraised if taken in payment of a just debt due from a solvent debtor;⁶⁶ the amount of cash for which an article will exchange in fact;⁶⁷ the market value;⁶⁸ the price which the property will bring when offered for sale by one who desires to sell, but is not compelled to do so, and is bought by one who desires to purchase, but is not compelled to do so;⁶⁹ the usual selling price at private sale and not at forced or auction sale;⁷⁰ the value for purposes of sale, if the property is salable.⁷¹ It has been said that "cash value" is measured by the amount of cash into which property can be converted,⁷² or the amount of cash required to procure it, provided its utility is commensurate with its cost;⁷³ that it presupposes an ability to sell or transfer;⁷⁴ that it implies the existence of property to be sold or transferred,⁷⁵ and an inherent value independent of its ownership or the uses to which it is put;⁷⁶ and that it imports value in money presently paid,⁷⁷ although the phrase has also been held to signify value in cash or the equivalent of cash as distinguished from a sum laid down on the spot in cash.⁷⁸ "Cash value" has been held synonymous with, or equivalent to, "actual value,"⁷⁹ "clear market value,"⁸⁰ "fair and reasonable cash value,"⁸¹ "fair market value,"⁸² "market cash value,"⁸³ "market value,"⁸⁴ "salable value,"⁸⁵ "transfer value,"⁸⁶ and "value."⁸⁷ The phrase also has been compared with "market value,"⁸⁸ and has been distinguished from "book value," see Book 11 C.J.S. p 522 note 21.

Copper cash swords. Swords made up of a number of copper coins corded together and securely fastened around an iron rod or bar covered by metal foil.⁸⁹ As included in the metal schedule of the tariff law see C.J.S. title Customs Duties § 34, also 17 C.J. p 561 note 18 [a].

Fair and reasonable cash value. Price which the property would bring at a fair voluntary sale. The phrase has been held to import value in money presently paid, and to exclude a valuation based on credit.⁹⁰ It has been held equivalent to "cash value" see supra note 81, and to "fair market or real value."⁹¹

such a price as honest and impartial men would naturally and reasonably place upon any given piece of property in view of its useful capabilities and the end to be accomplished by its sale and purchase.⁹²

Fair cash value. "Fair cash value" means the highest price that a normal purchaser, not under peculiar compulsion, will pay at that time to get that thing;⁹³ fair or reasonable cash price for which property can be sold in the market;⁹⁴ the price property will bring in a fair market.⁹⁵ It has been said that the phrase generally means market value, but that if the property is in actual use by the owner in such a way that it possesses a peculiar value to him, which would be sacrificed if placed upon the general market, "fair cash value" may have reference to its value to the owner.⁹⁶ "Fair cash value" has been held equivalent to "cash market value" see supra note 44, and "true value in cash."⁹⁷

tingency, event, or incident due to some sudden, unexpected, or unusual cause, not to be foreseen or guarded against, that which comes by chance or without design or without being foreseen,⁵² or that which proceeds from an unknown cause, or is an unusual effect of a known cause,⁵³ without any element of conscious human design or intentional human agency; but in ordinary usage the term may be, and quite commonly is, applied to such a loss or injury notwithstanding the conscious or intended act of some other person produces it,⁵⁴ as a fortuitous happening caused by some human agency which one cannot control,⁵⁵ and, more specifically, disability or loss of life in battle or military service from wounds, etc.⁵⁶

Unavoidable casualty. In the sense in which "unavoidable" means inevitable, as distinguished from unavoidable by the exercise of due care, it has been said that the phrase signifies a happening or non-happening of an event that cannot be avoided,⁷⁸ or an accident which human prudence, foresight, and sagacity cannot prevent.⁷⁹ In the sense in which "unavoidable" means inevitable by the exercise of due care, as distinguished from actually or absolutely inevitable, an "unavoidable casualty" is one which could not have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable diligence and skill,⁸⁰ or an event or casualty happening against the will and without the negligence or other default of a party.⁸¹ Interpreting the words "unavoidable casualty," not according to their strict and philosophical significance but in conformity to their popular every-day acceptance, the phrase includes an occurrence in which there is a degree of unexpectedness, something unforeseen and not contemplated, although in the natural course of things.⁸² According to such popular every-day acceptance, and not according to a very strict and narrow construction, the phrase is not limited to an injury done by some other means than human instrumentality, but will include an injury by a stranger,⁸³ although in a particular connection and context it has been held that the words do not include an injury through accident or negligence by an outsider.⁸⁴ The phrase has been held not to include a bad market.⁸⁵ "Unavoidable casualty" has been distinguished from "accident," see Accident 1 C.J.S. p 444 note 38. Destruction of premises by reason of unavoidable casualty as affecting the liability under a lease see Landlord and Tenant C.J.S. § 414, also 36 C.J. p 202 note 1, and C.J.S. § 486, also 36 C.J. p 329 note 79, and unavoidable casualty preventing the presentation of a defense as ground for a new trial see the C.J.S. title New Trial § 81, also 46 C.J. p 214 note 79 [c].

Unavoidable casualty or misfortune. The phrase has been defined as meaning some mishap which could not have been guarded against by the exercise of ordinary care;⁸⁶ such casualty or misfortune as could not by the exercise of reasonable skill and diligence have been avoided.⁸⁷ It is something more than mere misfortune,⁸⁸ the word "unavoidable" being construed to apply to both "casualty" and "misfortune."⁸⁹ As ground for opening or vacating a judgment see the C.J.S. title Judgments § 280, also 34 C.J. p 313 note 22-p 314 note 23, and, when preventing a defense, as ground for new trial see the C.J.S. title New Trial § 82, also 46 C.J. p 216 note 96 [a] (3).

Cattle range. A large section of country consisting generally of many square miles which is usually uninclosed and has no definite or fixed boundaries on which cattle are permitted to run at large during the entire year.³⁶ It is a distinctive term,³⁷ applied to a range usually and customarily used for cattle, to distinguish it from "sheep range," and "cattle and sheep range."³⁸

Cattle rustling. A well understood term and usually understood to apply to the stealing of bovine cattle, it being a matter of common knowledge that bovine cattle are more generally allowed to run at large on a range, without herders, than are other animals, and therefore more easily stolen and driven away than other animals.³⁹

Cattle stealing. The term has been defined by statute to mean the theft of any horned animal, and all animals having the hoof cloven, except hogs, and held to include the theft of a goat.⁴⁰

CAUSE.

In General

It has been said that while "cause" may have various meanings and shades of meanings,⁹² it is a word in common use and of generally known meanings implying a consequence,⁹³ and, in its ordinary sense of the word, has reference to the physical, as distinguished from the legal, cause.⁹⁴

As a Noun

Philosophically speaking, the sum of all the antecedents of any event constitutes its cause; but ordinarily each separate antecedent of an event is considered as a cause for such event, provided, however, that the event could not have happened except for such antecedent;⁹⁵ and so the word has

Commercial causes. Within an order of court for prompt trial the term means causes arising out of the ordinary transactions of merchants and traders.⁸

Concurrent causes. In the sense of occupying exactly the same space of time, the phrase has been defined as meaning coincident or contemporaneous causes, and, in the sense of operating to produce a result, as meaning causes acting conjointly, and connectedly coöperating to produce the result.⁹ If two distinct causes are operating at the same time to produce a given result, which might be produced by either, they are concurrent causes; they run together, as the word signifies, to the same end. ring; one of them must be the proximate, and the other the remote, cause.¹⁰ "Concurrent cause" has been distinguished from "contributory cause," "efficient cause,"¹¹ "intervening means or instrument,"¹² and "proximate cause."¹³

As used in the law of negligence, see the C.J.S. title Negligence § 110, also 45 C.J. p 925 note 18-p 926 note 25.

Efficient cause. The "working cause," or that cause which produces effects or results.¹⁴ The term has been held synonymous with "first cause," "initial cause," and "proximate cause";¹⁵ compared with "procuring cause"¹⁶ and "proximate cause."¹⁷

First cause. The cause acting first and immediately producing the injury, or setting other causes in motion, all constituting a natural and continuous chain of events each having a close causal connection with its immediate predecessor.¹⁸

Immediate cause. It has been said that the term is not capable of perfect or general definition.¹⁹ While it is a term frequently used to express the same meaning as "proximate cause," or as a synonym thereof,²⁰ it has also been distinguished therefrom,²¹ and its use as meaning "proximate cause" criticized as without discrimination,²² and manifestly wrong when implying time or distance.²³ It has been said that the nearest or immediate cause of an effect may be merely an instrument of the dominant or efficient cause.²⁴

Intervening cause. It has been said that "intervening cause" is a phrase probably not capable of definition in terms which will be applicable to all cases, and that events of causative influence may intervene between the initial act and the final result, without displacing the initial act from the position of proximate cause, if the intermediate events themselves were natural sequences of the initial act;²⁵ but that the "intervening cause" to which the law has reference is one which moves from some source independent of the plaintiff and defendant,²⁶ and implies responsibility for the result.²⁷ In this sense, "intervening cause" has been defined as meaning an independent cause which interrupts the natural sequence of events, prevents the ordinary and probable result of the original act or omission, and produces a different result which could not have been reasonably anticipated;²⁸ an independent cause which intervenes between the original wrongful act or omission and the injury turns aside the natural sequence of events, and produces a result which would not otherwise have followed, and which could not have been reasonably anticipated;²⁹ the act of an independent agency which destroys the causal connection between the original act and the injury, the independent act being the immediate cause.³⁰ Referred to as "efficient intervening cause," it has been defined as aning a new and independent force which breaks causal connection between the original wrong and the injury;³¹ a new proximate cause which breaks the connection with the original cause and makes itself solely responsible for the result in action; an independent force, entirely superseding the original action and rendering its effect in causation remote.³² As applied specifically to questions of liability for negligent acts, see the C.J. title Negligence § 111, also 45 C.J. p 930 note -p 931 note 54.

Joint cause [or causes] of action. A term which includes causes of action against wrongdoers as well as causes of action against joint parties to a contract.³³

Juridical cause. A cause that, by the usual course of events, would result, in the particular injury, in independent disturbing moral agencies intervening, and the term has been used sometimes as the equivalent of "proximate cause."³⁴

Just cause. Legal cause or lawful cause;³⁵ a lawful ground.³⁶ In a particular connection, it has been held that "just cause" implies the existence of facts justifying the action taken, something more than a mere wish.³⁷ "Just cause" has been held synonymous with, or equivalent to, "ample cause,"³⁸ "just and sufficient cause,"³⁹ "legal cause,"⁴⁰ and "reasonable cause,"⁴¹ has been compared with, or distinguished from, "actual cause,"⁴² "excuse,"⁴³ and "probable cause."⁴⁴

Probable cause. "Probable cause" has been defined as meaning a cause which is probable;⁴⁵ a belief founded on reasonable grounds;⁴⁶ a reasonable ground of presumption that a charge is or may be well founded.⁴⁷ It has been said that the term is difficult to define,⁴⁸ but that it signifies about the same in law as in common parlance;⁴⁹ that it does not import absolute certainty but only implies the existence of reasonable grounds for belief.⁵⁰ "Probable cause" has been held synonymous with, or equivalent to, "proximate cause,"⁵¹ "reasonable cause,"⁵² "reasonable or probable cause,"⁵³ has been likened to "sufficient cause;"⁵⁴ has been both compared with, and distinguished from, "actual and positive cause,"⁵⁵ "beyond a reasonable doubt,"⁵⁶ "good reason to believe,"⁵⁷ "legal cause,"⁵⁸ "malice,"⁵⁹ and "reasonable cause."⁶⁰ "Probable cause," as affecting or determining legal action or legal rights, is treated, inter alia, in such titles as Arrest, Attachment, Bail, Criminal Law, False Imprisonment, Habeas Corpus, Internal Revenue, Libel and Slander, Malicious Prosecution, Process, and Searches and Seizures.

Proximate cause. The name of a legal doctrine of causation.⁶¹ Literally "proximate cause" means the cause nearest to the effect produced,⁶² and this is said to be its meaning in ordinary language;⁶³ but in legal terminology the term is not confined to its literal meaning,⁶⁴ nor to its significance in the understanding of the layman,⁶⁵ and it has been broadly referred to as the cause to which the effect is attributed by the rational judgment of mankind.⁶⁶ "Proximate cause" has been defined as a cause, not necessarily the last, in a connected succession of events leading to a result;⁶⁷ that cause which naturally led to and which might have been expected to produce the result;⁶⁸ that which immediately precedes and produces the effect, as distinguished from the remote, mediate, or predisposing cause;⁶⁹ that which, in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new cause, produces an event, and without which that event would not have occurred;⁷⁰ that which stands next in causation to the effect—not necessarily in time or space, but in causal relation;⁷¹ the dominant cause, not the one which is incidental to that cause, its mere instrument, although the latter may be nearest in place and time;⁷² the efficient cause;⁷³ the nearest, the immediate, the direct cause;⁷⁴ the one that necessarily sets the other cause or causes in operation;⁷⁵ the primary cause, even though it may act through successive instruments;⁷⁶ the real, actual, efficient, or responsible cause.⁷⁷

More strictly defined, an act is the proximate cause of an event when, in the natural order of things and under the particular circumstances surrounding it, such an act would necessarily produce the event;⁷⁸ but the practical construction placed upon the term by many of the courts is a cause from which a man of ordinary experience and sagacity could foresee that the result might probably ensue.⁷⁹

It has been said that, although established in use,⁸⁰ it is an unsatisfactory phrase,⁸¹ difficult to define,⁸² that no general or authoritative definition has been evolved, as a matter of law, but that the definition in each instance is to be determined by the peculiar facts or circumstances of the case;⁸³ also that the difficulty lies in applying the definition, as announced, to the facts in the particular case;⁸⁴ and so the phrase has been variously and frequently applied to different classes of cases in different senses, the definitions varying and depending on the sense in which the term is used.⁸⁵

It has been held that the term implies an unbroken causal connection,⁸⁶ or something more than a mere succession of events or a succession of causes and effects,⁸⁷ and may imply the existence of two or more possible causes;⁸⁸ that it refers to the person producing the result as distinguished from the moving influence itself,⁸⁹ and to a situation which, with reference to particular circumstances, must be looked at as a practical unit, rather than as calling for inquiry into a purely logical priority;⁹⁰ but that it does not necessarily refer to time or distance,⁹¹ although, under particular circumstances, proximity of time or space may be involved as having an evidential bearing upon it;⁹² nor, as generally held, does the phrase involve the idea of necessity of result from the act,⁹³ although the contrary seems also to have been held.⁹⁴

"Proximate cause" has been held equivalent to, or interchangeable or synonymous with, "directly contributed to,"⁹⁵ "efficient procuring cause,"⁹⁶ "initial cause,"⁹⁷ "means which 'thereby caused,'"⁹⁸ and "sole proximate cause;"⁹⁹ also compared and sometimes distinguished from "direct cause,"¹ "in-intermediate cause,"² "last cause,"³ "major cause,"⁴ and "sole cause,"⁵ and distinguished from, and held to be the antithesis of, "remote cause."⁶ As used in the law of negligence generally, see the C.J.S. title Negligence § 103, also 45 C.J. p 897 note 2-p 901 note 26, and as applied to the law of damages see the C.J.S. title Damages § 19, also 17 C.J. p 734 note 26-p 741 note 76.

Remote cause. While it has been found impracticable to prescribe by abstract definition, applicable to all possible states of facts, what is a remote cause,⁷ it has been defined, under particular states of facts, as a cause operating mediately through other causes to produce an effect,⁸ a cause the connection between which and the effect is uncertain, vague, or indeterminate,⁹ a cause which does not contain in itself the element of necessity between it and its effect,¹⁰ a cause which is inconclusive in reasoning, because from it no certain conclusion can be legitimately drawn, or that cause which some indefinite or independent force merely took advantage of to accomplish something not the probable or natural effect thereof,¹¹ an improbable cause,¹² that which may have happened, and yet no injury have occurred notwithstanding no injury could have occurred if it had not happened;¹³ or that which would not, according to the experience of mankind, lead to the event which happened.¹⁴

Unforeseen cause. A cause which is not foreknown or which could not have been foreseen as likely to arise or occur.¹⁵

As a Verb

—Present Tense. As a verb, "cause" has been defined as meaning to act as a cause or agent in producing, to be the cause or occasion of, to compel, or force;³⁸ to bring about;³⁹ to bring into existence;⁴⁰ to effect⁴¹ as an agent;⁴² to make;⁴³ to produce.⁴⁴ It has been said that as a verb, the word is one of very broad import and generally known meaning, implying affirmative,⁴⁵ voluntary and intentional⁴⁶ action; and that, in a particular connection, it may well be used with reference to acts which bring about,⁴⁷ or assist in the continuance of a state already existing.⁴⁸ While it has been said to be generally descriptive of some affirmative act—an act of commission,⁴⁹ it has also been held, under particular circumstances, to imply passive neglect, deeds of omission, and failures to exercise duties faithfully.⁵⁰ "Cause" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "compel"⁵¹ "create,"

CAVE. A hollow place in the earth;⁸² a subterranean cavity capable of being possessed and used by one who has no title to the surface of the real estate within which it lies.⁸³ It has been said that more often it is a natural cavity, but not necessarily so;⁸⁴ that it consists of the cavity and so much of the material above, about, and below the cavity as is necessary to preserve and maintain the cavity; and that it may imply an ownership separate and apart from that of the remaining portion of the land.⁸⁵ The terms, "cave" and "building," have been compared see Building 12 C.J.S. p 382 note 38.

CAVEAT. Latin literally, "Let him beware."⁸⁷ In general, the term has been defined as meaning a formal notice or warning given by a party interested, to a court, judge, or ministerial officer against the performance of certain acts within his power and jurisdiction; an intimation given to some judge or officer notifying him to suspend a proceeding until the merits of the caveat are determined.⁸⁸ It has been said that a "caveat" is an objection to the issuance of papers in a particular proceeding;⁸⁹ that it is in the nature of an inhibition and has the effect of suspending proceedings;⁹⁰ and that it always precedes the act, and is never heard of as a means of undoing what has been already done.⁹¹

As used specifically in connection with the appointment of an executor or administrator, see the C.J.S. title Executors and Administrators § 56, also 23 C.J. p 1061 note 98; in patent law, see the C.J.S. title Patents § 130, also 48 C.J. p 168 note 85-p 169 note 91, and also 11 C.J. p 43 note 2; and in probate proceedings see the C.J.S. title Wills § 322, also 68 C.J. p 900 note 35.

"The standard by which defendant's conduct should be tested is . . . that of an ordinarily cautious and prudent man. The word 'cautious,' when not so limited, may suggest the idea of timidity. . . . A room or set of rooms below the surface of the ground and usually under a building;⁸⁵ sometimes a room under a sidewalk.⁸⁶ In a particular connection, "cellar" has been defined by statute as meaning a story more than one half below the level of the curb.⁸⁷ "Cellar" has been held synonymous with "vault,"⁸⁸ and has been compared with, and distinguished from, "basement," see Basement 9 C.J.S. p 1554 note 47, and, when under the sidewalk, has been held to be sometimes equivalent to "areaway," see Areaway 6 C.J.S. p 332 note 44. The word has also been used to designate a receptacle on the truck of a railroad car or engine placed underneath the bearing of the axle for the purpose of keeping the bearing properly oiled while in motion; see C.J.S. title Railroads § 1, and also 11 C.J. p 47 note 58.

An eternal relationship

"Respecting celestial marriage it is said: 'Marriage, as regarded by the Latter-Day Saints, is ordained of God, and designed to be an eternal CELLULAR BOX. See Box 11 C.J.S. p 762 note 41.

CELLULOID. An arbitrary and fanciful trade-name for various compounds of pyroxyline.⁹⁰

CELLULOSE. A carbohydrate in which the carbon and water are united in the same proportion as in starch, the difference being in the structure of the molecules; it has been said to be the principal component of paper or wood and the common raw material employed in the arts of paper and wood-pulp manufacture.⁹¹

CEMENT. In its ordinary commercial sense, the word has been defined as a substance used in a soft or pasty state to join stones or bricks in a building, etc., which afterward becomes hard like stone.⁹² In a larger sense, the word has been defined as meaning any substance used by men or animals for making bodies adhere to each other, as glue, sealing wax, starch paste, etc.⁹³ "Cement," as commonly used, implies that a substance is dissolved in a solvent, and when the solvent is evaporated the cement hardens, and binds the layers of material together.⁹⁴ It has been said that the word "cement" has various significations, its precise definition depending on the circumstances of its use; that it has the ordinary commercial meaning of hydraulic cement, and also a larger, and perhaps more generally accepted, sense.⁹⁵

Natural cement. The quick-setting product of a low-temperature kiln burning a cement rock of irregular composition.⁹⁶

Portland cement. The slow-setting product of a high-temperature kiln burning a pulverized cement rock, or mixture of clay and limestone of a very exact and regular composition.⁹⁷

Other phrases: "A thin layer of heat and moisture-proof glue or cement;" also, as a verb, "cemented together."⁹⁸

CEMENTERIO. In Spanish law, cemetery.⁹⁹

CEMENTING. A specific method of uniting substances; and "cementing" has been compared with other specific methods of securing materials together, such as "nailing," "pegging," "riveting," "sewing," "soldering," "vulcanizing," and "welding."¹

§ 1. Definitions and Kinds

A cemetery is a place or area of ground set aside for the burial of the dead. There are two classes of cemeteries, public and private.

A cemetery is a place where the dead bodies of human beings are buried;¹ it is a place or area of ground set apart for the burial of the dead,² either by public authority or private enterprise.³ The term is synonymous with graveyard,⁴ burial ground,⁵ and place of burial,⁶ and it includes not only lots for depositing the bodies of the dead, but also such avenues, walks, and grounds as may be necessary for its use or for ornamental purposes.⁷ The term "graveyard" is also defined as a place for the burial of the dead.⁸ The terms "cemetery," "burying ground," and "graveyard," as used in tax exemption laws are defined in the C.J.S. title in Taxation § 292, also 61 C.J. p 490 notes 38-40, 44. Because of its inherent nature, a burial ground is not subject to laws of ordinary property nor liable to be devoted to common uses.⁹

The law contemplates two classes of cemeteries, public and private.¹⁰ The former class is used by the general community or neighborhood or church, while the latter is used only by a family or a small portion of a community.¹¹ A public cemetery is as much a public place as a courthouse or a market.¹²

§ 2. Establishment and Regulation

A cemetery is created by setting the ground apart for the burial of the dead, marking it, and distinguishing it from the adjoining ground as a place of burial. The state in the exercise of its police power has the right to provide for the establishment and discontinuance of cemeteries and to regulate their use, and this power it can delegate to municipalities or other qualified agencies of local government.

A cemetery is not created merely by the use of a tract of land for the burial of the dead, but it is created by the act of setting the ground apart for the burial of the dead, marking it, and distinguishing it from the adjoining ground as a place of burial.¹³ The use of ground for a public or private cemetery is not unlawful,¹⁴ but private interests in the place of burial are so far public that they are subject to the control of the public authorities having charge of police regulations,¹⁵ and the state in the exercise of its police power has the right to provide for the establishment and discontinuance of cemeteries and to regulate their use,¹⁶ including the right to require the removal of the remains of persons theretofore buried.¹⁷ The exercise of the police power with regard to cemeteries is subject to the usual constitutional limitations,¹⁸ and the only basis for its exercise is protection of the life, health, comfort, and well-being of the community.¹⁹ As burial places are indispensable and concern the public health, they are not the subject of absolute prohibition by legislative action.²⁰ The exercise of the police power is not prevented by provisions in corporate charters under which lands are held for burial purposes,²¹ for neither the state nor a municipality can preclude itself from enacting laws prohibiting burials in places where they constitute a public nuisance, and notwithstanding a charter has been granted to a cemetery association, the state or a municipality is not precluded from prohibiting further burials in the cemetery because of changed conditions rendering such further burials dangerous to health.²² However, a corporation cannot be deprived of its charter rights by an attempt at regulation which cannot be justified as an exercise of the police power.²³

a. In General

A municipality may adopt reasonable regulations with respect to burial places under express legislative authority or under its general police powers. However, it must not act arbitrarily or unreasonably.

The burial of the dead and the maintenance of cemeteries is not a municipal affair subject to regulation only under the express powers conferred by the charter of the municipality, but it is a subject for regulation under legislative enactment or under the police power.²⁹ A municipality may adopt reasonable regulations with respect to burial places within its limits under express legislative authority or grant of power for the purpose,³⁰ or under its general powers to safeguard the public health, welfare, and safety.³¹ Such power must not be exercised in an arbitrary or unreasonable manner,³² or in such a manner as to be discriminatory or creative of a monopoly.³³ The power when thus possessed is a continuing power which may be exercised by the municipality from time to time as the public health and welfare may require,³⁴ and it may prohibit future burials in existing cemeteries or the establishment of new cemeteries within specified portions of their corporate limits,³⁵ prevent the extension or enlargement of cemeteries already existing,³⁶ or require the removal of bodies from a cemetery already existing.³⁷ An ordinance is not arbitrary, unreasonable, or unjustly discriminatory because it permits the continued existence and operation of other well kept cemeteries in the district and prohibits future burials in a certain cemetery which is greatly neglected,³⁸ or directs the removal of bodies from the neglected cemetery where it is a menace to the safety of life and property in the district.³⁹ However, an ordinance which prohibits further burials in a cemetery not because of the fact that they would endanger the public health, but because the continued existence of the cemetery is detrimental to neighborhood real estate values, is so unreasonable and oppressive that it cannot be sustained as a valid exercise of the police power.⁴⁰ The adequacy of existing burying grounds may be considered in allowing or disallowing the reopening of a cemetery.⁴¹ An ordinance forbidding the establishment of a new cemetery applies to prevent burial in a cemetery laid out but in which no bodies have been interred.⁴² An ordinance promulgating a rule on which the state has already legislated is invalid.⁴³ In the absence of authority from the legislature, a municipality has no control over cemeteries established outside of the city limits.⁴⁴

b. Establishment and Management of Municipal Cemetery

When expressly so authorized, a municipality may own and maintain cemeteries. It may exercise general control over a cemetery owned by it, but must not exercise the control in an arbitrary, unreasonable, or capricious manner.

When permitted by statute or by charter, a city has power to acquire land for cemetery purposes and to maintain cemeteries,⁴⁵ and, although not expressly stated in the grant of power, it may do this outside the city limits.⁴⁶ Power granted by a city charter to purchase grounds for cemetery purposes outside the city is not inconsistent with a statute empowering purchase of lands for such purposes within the city limits.⁴⁷ Under a charter giving a city authority to establish cemeteries, it has discretion to judge of their necessity and to select their location.⁴⁸ Where a statute authorizes a town to own and manage a cemetery, a conveyance of land to the trustees of the town for use as a cemetery vests title in the town.⁴⁹

A city may, of course, exercise general control over a cemetery owned by it;⁵⁰ but such control must not be exercised in an arbitrary, unreasonable, or capricious manner,⁵¹ and the city is governed by the same rules as control private corporations engaged in a similar business under like circumstances.⁵²

Powers of the city council over cemeteries which are not divested by a statute delegating certain powers to a commission are retained by the council.⁵³ Notwithstanding the chairman of the city council is ex officio a member of the board of trustees of a cemetery, such board, unless the cemetery may be regarded as a part of the city property, cannot be regarded as a city board or agent.⁵⁴ When so provided by statute a township trustee is required to care for and maintain a public cemetery within the town and owned by it.⁵⁵ A city council is without authority to divest itself of title to a municipal cemetery and to confer upon private citizens the control and management vested by statute in the city.⁵⁶

§ 4. Change of Control

Change of control of a cemetery from a town to a city organized within the limits of the town may be effected by the legislature if the rights of the inhabitants are saved to them. A statute which requires a city to transfer a cemetery to a private corporation without adequate compensation is invalid.

The control of a cemetery which has been acquired by a town solely for public use, and in which it has no beneficial interest, may lawfully be taken from it by the legislature and vested in a city which has been organized within its limits, and which embraces the cemetery within its boundaries, if the rights and beneficial interests in the property of the inhabitants of both city and town are saved to them.⁵⁷ A statute providing that the title to public burial grounds located within a city is vested in the corporation where located authorizes township trustees to deed cemetery property within a city's limits to the city.⁵⁸ A statute which requires the city to transfer a cemetery to a private corporation without adequate compensation is invalid.⁵⁹ When not required by statute, an order of court is not necessary to enable a cemetery to be conveyed by a township board to a cemetery corporation.⁶⁰ A statute providing that, where a township is divided, its burying ground shall belong to the township in which it lies thereafter does not apply to a case where the cemetery falls within the limits of a city incorporated from the township.⁶¹

§ 5. Corporations and Associations

Under express statutory definition, a cemetery corporation means any corporation organized for the burial of the dead in a vault or receptacle.

Under express statutory definition, a cemetery corporation means any corporation organized for the burial of the dead in a vault or a receptacle.⁶² A corporation organized as a fraternal body and so incorporated does not constitute a cemetery corporation, although it has owned and managed a cemetery as a voluntary service to the community for many years.⁶³

§ 6. — Formation and Organization in General

Dependent on applicable statutory provisions in the various jurisdictions, a cemetery corporation may or may not be organized under the general corporate law and may or may not be organized for pecuniary profit.

Cemetery corporations are usually regarded as organized for public rather than for private purposes,⁶⁴ and their management has been held to be in the nature of a charitable, pious, or sacred trust.⁶⁵ Ordinarily, statutes expressly provide for their formation, and a corporation organized under the general corporation law as a business corporation rather than under the special statutory provisions is not entitled to the rights of a cemetery corporation.⁶⁶ However, when permitted by statute, commercial corporations for owning, managing, and operating cemeteries may be organized under the general statutes.⁶⁷ The duration of a cemetery corporation which is incorporated as a benevolent corporation is necessarily perpetual.⁶⁸ Where a statute requires a portion of the lots in a cemetery to be occupied as a condition for the incorporation of a cemetery association, it is not necessary that all the lots be occupied by the dead.⁶⁹ A statute prohibiting additional cemetery corporations in a certain county has been held not to prohibit the incorporation of a cemetery association in existence and operating a cemetery at the time of the enactment of the statute.⁷⁰ Under a statute authorizing individuals to associate for the purpose of procuring and establishing a burying ground, individuals may associate to enlarge a burying ground theretofore used as a public burying ground.⁷¹ Where title to land purchased by a religious corporation is taken in the name of trustees to hold for the use and benefit of the members of the parish, a majority of the parishioners are not proprietors and entitled to incorporate under a statute permitting incorporation by proprietors of a cemetery.⁷²

Pecuniary profit. In accordance with statutory provisions in the particular jurisdictions, cemetery corporations may⁷³ or may not⁷⁴ be organized for profit. Incorporators who are the only parties financially interested in the undertaking and who take all the risks incident to the enterprise cannot be considered as promoters taking a secret profit, where the extent of the return on their investment or their profit is definite and liquidated.⁷⁵

Amendment of by-laws. An amendment of the by-laws of a cemetery association without notice to its members as required by the by-laws is invalid, although the by-laws do not provide the manner of notice.⁷⁶

§ 7. — Membership

Under express statutory provisions, owners of lots become members of the cemetery corporation. Where the corporation is not for pecuniary profit, the members cannot make a profit for themselves.

Under express statutory provisions in some jurisdictions, or under express provisions in the charter of the corporation, owners of lots purchased of cemetery corporations may become members thereof, and be entitled to vote in the election of officers and on other matters to the same extent as stockholders in other corporations.⁷⁷ Ownership of a lot is not equivalent to membership in a society which by its charter was to consist of such persons as might be admitted members and comply with the articles and rules of the society.⁷⁸

Where a cemetery corporation is formed under laws relating to the formation of corporations not for pecuniary profit, the members cannot make a profit for themselves out of the sales of lots or other revenue of the cemetery; nor can they make a gift of their revenue to another and independent corporation.⁷⁹

§ 8. — Stock

When permitted by statute a cemetery corporation may issue stock and pay dividends to stockholders. Stockholders may enact by-laws and the laws generally applicable to the ownership of stock may be enforced.

When permitted by statute cemetery corporations may be organized as business rather than as charitable corporations, and may issue stock and pay dividends to stockholders.⁸⁰ In accordance with the provisions of the statute, stockholders may claim dividends if after current expenses are deducted from the total receipts from all sources a surplus remains, but the trustees need not declare a dividend, the declaration with them being discretionary in accordance with the general power of directors of a corporation over dividends.⁸¹ Where there never have been any profits or moneys unexpended in the hands of the association, not needed for the care and improvement of the cemetery grounds, a promoter and stockholder is not entitled to an accounting.⁸² Where a cemetery corporation has power to issue and to sell stock, the directors may sue the stockholders for their unpaid stock subscriptions, and if the directors do not do so, equity will assume jurisdiction to compel stockholders to pay the amount unpaid on their stock subscriptions for the purpose of paying the debts of the corporation.⁸³ A bill in equity for the abrogation of a by-law, under which the incorporators of a cemetery corporation design to perpetuate themselves in office, will not lie until it is manifest that a change cannot be effected through appropriate corporate action, mandamus may be resorted to to compel the calling of a corporate meeting, and a majority of the stockholders may enact by-laws.⁸⁴ A cemetery corporation's by-law prohibiting the sale of stock until it is first offered for sale to the corporation is valid and binding on each stockholder, and the corporation is not required to recognize as stockholders persons who have bought stock not previously offered to the corporation.⁸⁵

er, where such is not contemplated by the statute governing incorporation of cemeteries.⁸⁶ Where specific provision is made for the organization of cemetery corporations, but such corporations are made subject to the general supervisory powers of the legislature, an issue of stock by such a corporation, although unauthorized, may be validated by a subsequent act of the legislature. The rights of stockholders may be protected in equity, and the laws generally applicable to the ownership of stock may be enforced.⁸⁷

§ 9. — Land Shares or Certificates

Under statutes so providing, a cemetery corporation, in payment for the land purchased, may give land shares, or certificates which entitle the holder to receive a certain part of the proceeds of subsequent sales of burial lots.

Under statutes which so provide, a cemetery corporation may purchase land, giving in payment therefor what are known as land shares or certificates authorizing the holders to receive a certain percentage of the proceeds of subsequent sales of burial lots by the cemetery corporation; and the rights of holders and transferees of such shares and certificates as between themselves or in relation to the association or corporation must be determined by their contracts, as construed in connection with the governing law and the circumstances.⁸⁸ Where the statute provides that cemetery corporations may issue certificates of indebted-

Restriction to net proceeds

Under statute providing that cemetery corporations might agree to pay vendor of lands one half of proceeds of all sales, and that residue should be applied to preservation, improvement, and embellishment of the cemeteries, holders of land purchase certificates can be entitled to share only in one half of net proceeds of sales.—Reese v. Pinelawn Cemetery, 276 N.Y.S. 381, 243 App.Div. 165.

Waivers of proportionate share of proceeds resulting from sale of four hundred acres of land, in order that corporation might pay its debts, have been supported by consideration, and the corporation was required to apply first its share of proceeds of sale to liquidate the indebtedness and then have recourse to proportionate share of those signing waivers to extent necessary to pay any deficiency; further, where waivers were without time limit, the fact that the land was not sold until some twelve years later did not affect their validity, especially where failure to sell within reasonable time

ness of a particular nature and for particular purposes, the corporation is impliedly prohibited from issuing any others.⁸⁹ Irregularities in the issuing of land shares by a cemetery association and the rights of the shareholders cannot be adjudicated in a proceeding to which they are not made parties.⁹⁰

Such certificates are not to be regarded as stock certificates,⁹¹ but have been held more in the nature of nonnegotiable promises to pay money,⁹² and the holder is chargeable with notice of statutory restrictions on the powers of the corporation.⁹³ The holders are not to be regarded as ordinary stockholders, and as such deferred to the claims of creditors, but on distribution of the proceeds of a sale of the corporation property on insolvency, they are entitled to equality of payment therewith.⁹⁴ They are not to be regarded as holders of liens on the land out of which the burial lots were formed,⁹⁵ and if in any event they may be so regarded, they may lose such liens by reason of laches.⁹⁶

In accordance with applicable statutory provisions, where the association fails to apply the proportionate share of proceeds for payment of certificates as required, a holder is entitled to equitable relief to determine the amount of his interest in the proceeds and for payment of the same,⁹⁷ but he is entitled only to an action in equity for an accounting and incidental relief and he is not entitled to maintain an action at law.⁹⁸ Where money from the sale of lots which rightfully belongs to certificate holders is withheld from them, the certificate holders are entitled to interest.⁹⁹

Holders of debt certificates have a right to insist that the land be sold for cemetery purposes only and that out of the proceeds not payable to the vendors or land certificate holders, the directors shall set up a sinking fund for their payment.¹

A certificate holder is not entitled to obtain an injunction against the prosecution of actions at law by third persons against a cemetery corporation.²

§ 10. — Officers, Agents, and Management

The management of a cemetery association or corporation is to be exercised by its officers and agents chosen in accordance with, and possessing the powers limited by, governing statutory and charter provisions.

Unless expressly authorized so to do by statute, a cemetery association cannot deprive itself of the right to select its own officers and control its own affairs.³ Where a general statute author-

Invalidation of charter

A provision in the charter of a cemetery association that the trustees shall be the regularly elected trustees of a specified church invalidates the charter because of the fact that it takes from the members

izes the lot holders to conduct the affairs of the association they may lawfully do so, although the association has been incorporated under a special act vesting its control in its stockholders, in a case where the stockholders have abandoned the control.⁴ The right of control over a cemetery maintained by a church is vested, when so provided by statute, in those designated by the canons, regulations, and customs of the church society.⁵ Express statutory provisions as to the election and qualification of officers must be complied with.⁶

The exercise of responsibility in discretionary matters by cemetery trustees must not be too minutely scrutinized.⁷ Where the minimum number of trustees necessary for a quorum transact business in which one of the trustees present is disqualified because of personal interest, a quorum is lacking invalidating the act.⁸

§ 11. — Powers, Duties, and Liabilities

A cemetery corporation cannot engage in activities

outside the purposes of its incorporation. In the absence of statute, it is not exempt from civil liability and an action at law will lie against it for ordinary indebtedness for work or services. A cemetery corporation may receive bequests if authorized by statute or by its charter and it may buy and sell vaults to its lot owners at cost.

A cemetery corporation cannot engage in activities outside the purposes of its incorporation,⁹ or create obligations contrary to statute,¹⁰ and two cemetery companies, without statutory power, cannot enter into a joint undertaking which makes each liable for moneys received by the other.¹¹ In the absence of statute, a cemetery corporation or association is not exempt from civil liability,¹² and an action at law will also lie against it for ordinary indebtedness for work or services.¹³ It has a right and is under a duty to prevent any trespass on the cemetery, and this right and duty may be guarded by the adoption of reasonable rules and regulations.¹⁴ Where a cemetery corporation has invoked the power of eminent domain to acquire rights in lands of others, it can be compelled of the corporation the right to choose their trustees.—In re North Forest Cemetery Assoc., supra.

Limitation of terms

Where a full board of directors was elected without designation as to the term of each and the statute provided that the term should be three years with one third elected annually, it was proper for the directors to agree among themselves as to whom should constitute the third whose term would expire at the end of the year, and the limitation of the terms of one third of the directors after election to conform to the statute has been held not to interfere with the franchise right of the electors.—In re Washington Cemetery, 238 N.Y.S. 664, 135 Misc. 763.

14. Tex.—Oakland Cemetery Lot Owners' Ass'n v. Castleberry, Civ. App., 25 S.W.2d 639.

Decoration of graves at burials

Cemetery society would not be restrained from enforcing regulations whereby society reserved right to provide grass, matting, and tents for decoration of graves at burials, where evidence disclosed that regulations were adopted as result of complaints of trespass on lots and graves, that regulations were not unreasonable, and that charge required for use of such equipment to afford reasonable service to the public at reasonable rates.¹⁵ A statute which authorizes a religious corporation to take and hold realty for cemetery purposes authorizes the use of the realty for such purposes.¹⁶

A cemetery association may receive a bequest for the benefit of a cemetery when so permitted under applicable statutory provisions.¹⁷ Likewise, a cemetery corporation may accept a bequest setting apart a sum in perpetuity for the care of a burial lot, if authorized so to do by its charter¹⁸ or by statute,¹⁹ but in the absence of charter or statutory authorization a cemetery company cannot act as trustee of a fund bequeathed for the maintenance of a lot if it is not named as trustee in the will.²⁰ Under statutes expressly so providing, a cemetery association has the duty to accept sums offered to it for the perpetual care of a lot or grave.²¹

Manufacture and sale of vaults. A cemetery corporation has been held to have implied power to buy and sell vaults to its lot owners at cost.²² The making and disposing of vaults to its lot owners by a cemetery association is authorized by a statute empowering it to construct and operate proper means for disposing of the dead,²³ and such activities do not constitute the engaging in an unauthorized business for profit.²⁴

Rights as to unsold lots. A cemetery corporation organized for profit holds unsold lots as private property which it may use for such purposes as it sees fit,²⁵ and it may sell burial plots at a price fixed by it or refuse to sell.²⁶ Under a trust of land for cemetery purposes which does not state whether it shall be used or sold for free burial purposes, the trustees may sell lots for a reasonable price.²⁷ Where there is a reasonable and valid ordinance prohibiting the interment of the dead within certain limits in a city, permission by the city to a company to use land therein for a cemetery is sufficient consideration for its agreement to limit the prices of burial lots.²⁸

§ 12. — Funds

The disposal of funds derived from the sale of burial lots is usually dependent on statutory or charter provisions. Funds of a cemetery association may not be diverted to purposes other than those to which they should rightfully be applied, and investments and deposits must be made in accordance with statute.

The question of whether funds derived from the sale of burial lots are held in trust for the benefit of the lot owner necessarily depends on the terms of the charter and statutes under which the corporation is organized.²⁹ Under the construction of some charters it has been held that a surplus may be divided among the members,³⁰ while a cemetery association organized for the purpose of establishing a public cemetery, without capital stock or contributions from its members, is a trustee for the benefit of those who lawfully make use of lots sold to them by it, and is in duty bound to account to its beneficiaries, the lot owners, for moneys received therefrom.³¹ The execution of the trust, where a trust is regarded as existent, will be strictly enforced in a court of equity on the application of any member of the association,³² or any lot owner.³³ The date fixed for payment of a cemetery association's certificates of indebtedness limits the time up to which the directors may exercise discretion as to the application of the proceeds of sales of lots which are due to the holders of the certificates.³⁴ The fact that a by-law of a town, relative to a cemetery, provides that the moneys received by the trustees for lots shall constitute a fund for the purpose of the improvement of the cemetery does not create a trust which can be enforced in equity by the owners of the lots, particularly where the deeds under which plaintiffs hold their lots are subject to any by-laws, rules, or regulations which the town may thereafter adopt.³⁵

It is regarded as a matter of sound public policy to protect the funds of a cemetery association from diversion to purposes other than those to which they were originally appropriated; so, funds derived by a cemetery association from the sale of lots, under a contract that the money paid shall be used in the protection and ornamentation of the cemetery, cannot be diverted to other purposes.³⁶ The fact that the members of a cemetery company are also members of a particular church will not warrant the company in diverting its funds to the church.³⁷ When permitted by statute it is proper for a cemetery association to pay all or any part of the proceeds from the sale of lots on the purchase price of the cemetery.³⁸

trust by bequest is paid over directly to directors of a cemetery corporation without an order of court, as provided for by statute, gives them no greater right to invest the money than they would have, had they been designated by the court.⁴⁰ Under statutes so providing, a cemetery association may deposit at interest funds intrusted to it for the perpetual care of lots and graves with the treasurer of the municipality nearest to the cemetery.⁴¹

§ 13. — Supervision and Control

Where a trust for the establishment and maintenance of a cemetery is a charitable use, equity has jurisdiction to remedy such evils and irregularities as may arise in the administration of the trust.

In those jurisdictions in which a trust for the establishment and maintenance of a cemetery or public burying ground is a charitable use, equity is the proper jurisdiction in which to seek a remedy for such evils and irregularities as may arise in the administration of the trust by the corporation holding the legal title.⁴² Such proceedings may be instituted either by the attorney-general or by the parties in interest, but where the proceeding is instituted by lot holders or creditors, the attorney-general should be brought in and given the opportunity to take charge of and control that portion of the litigation which relates to the public right.⁴³ Under statutes expressly so providing, specified courts have the power of visitation of cemetery corporations.⁴⁴

§ 14. — Insolvency and Receivers

Receivership proceedings and a sale of the property of the association or corporation may be had and a distribution of the assets made.

While it has been held that the procedure prescribed in the case of an insolvent business corporation is inapplicable to an insolvent corporation formed under an act for the incorporation of cemeteries and administering a charitable use,⁴⁵ it has also been held that a receiver may be appointed and the franchise of a cemetery corporation forfeited under the sanction of a general statute,⁴⁶ and that under its general equity powers a chancery court may appoint a receiver to administer a trust which the trustees of an incorporated association, a charitable trust, are violating.⁴⁷ Notwithstanding a receivership, a cemetery association may be permitted to elect a board of trustees,⁴⁸ and title to its land remains in the corporation.⁴⁹

Sale of property. The receiver under a power to continue the business of the corporation should not be given unlimited power to sell lots other than necessary to meet expenses of maintenance and repair,⁵⁰ and, further, it has been held that he cannot sell the property of the corporation in violation of rights of certificate holders,⁵¹ but it is not necessary that the property of the cemetery be sold as a whole.⁵² However, a separate sale of the owners' possible reversionary interest and of the right to sell platted plots for burial purposes will not be permitted.⁵³

Where burial lots have been sold by a cemetery corporation, under an agreement for perpetual care and maintenance by the corporation, a decree of sale of the property of the corporation in insolvency properly requires the purchaser to invest a fund sufficient for the proper care and maintenance of such lots,⁵⁴ but in the absence of such a contract or of a statute creating the duty, the court cannot impose the duty on the purchaser to make improvements or provide for the future care or upkeep of the cemetery.⁵⁵

Distribution of assets. Liabilities, although different in form, which have been contracted for the general purposes of the corporation, are entitled to share equally in the distribution of the corporation's assets on insolvency.⁵⁶ However, the holder of a mortgage or a deed of trust is entitled to pref-

Effect of statute as to execution sale
Real Property Law § 450, as amended by L.1918 c 404, authorizing sale under execution to satisfy a valid judgment of cemetery lands in which interments had not been made, cannot operate to deprive the holders of land certificates of rights previously acquired pursuant to a valid statute, and hence does not justify as against such holders sale of cemetery lands not occupied or sold for burial purposes.—In re Chauncey, 181 N.Y.S. 653, 191 App.Div. 359, reversing 175 N.Y.S. 2, 106 Misc. 534.

Choice between bids

Bid for cemetery lands in receivership which provided for improvements, perpetual care fund, and continuing under existing franchise and regulations was held fair and acceptable, as against bid made without deposit which provided for no perpetual care fund, speculative bid depending on sale of lots, and bid of mortgagor alleged to be mainly interested in developing near-by com-

erence,⁵⁷ and where land has been purchased by a cemetery corporation, and in payment therefor certificates have been issued entitling the holders to one half of the proceeds of burial lots sold, the holders of such certificates, on a sale of the property of the corporation in insolvency, are entitled, as creditors, to prove a claim for one half of the proceeds of such sale available for distribution, to be added to their claims on account of sales of burial lots as to which they have had no accounting.⁵⁸

§ 15. Location

State or local legislative bodies may prohibit the establishment of cemeteries in certain places, but may not do so unreasonably or for merely aesthetic reasons.

State or local legislative bodies may prohibit the establishment of cemeteries in certain places or forbid future interments in cemeteries located within a specified area,⁵⁹ as within city limits,⁶⁰ but such circumstances may exist as would make it unreasonable, even in a city, absolutely to prohibit burial anywhere within the city limits.⁶¹ The interment of the bodies of the dead is proper and necessary, and state and municipal authorities may not prohibit the location of cemeteries in places where no possible danger to human life or health can result, merely for aesthetic reasons,⁶² or because cemeteries are not an agreeable subject of contemplation and are a source of annoyance to nervous or superstitious persons,⁶³ or because the value of adjoining land will be lessened.⁶⁴ The authorities of a city have no power to prohibit the establishment of cemeteries outside of the city limits,⁶⁵ unless expressly authorized by the legislature.⁶⁶ An ordinance prohibiting establishment of cemeteries within a certain distance of the corporate limits is to be strictly construed against the municipality, and it does not apply to premises previously established and dedicated as a cemetery.⁶⁷

A zoning ordinance which places an existing cemetery in a residence district has been held not to restrict the use of the cemetery.⁶⁸ A property owner's knowledge that a zoning ordinance is pending does not deprive him of the right to use his land for the establishment of a cemetery.⁶⁹

§ 16. — Consent of Adjacent Landowners

When so provided by statute, a cemetery cannot be laid out within a certain distance of a dwelling house, store, or place of business without the consent of the owner of the same.

Under statutes so providing, a cemetery cannot be laid out within a certain distance of a dwelling house, store, or place of business without the consent of the owner of the same,⁷⁰ whether the land is acquired by an appropriation proceeding or by purchase.⁷¹ A statute of that nature which exempts cemeteries of a certain size already in existence at the time of its enactment does not exempt a cemetery of that size not in existence.⁷² A statute providing that no cemetery shall be laid out within a certain distance of a dwelling house does not prohibit the taking of the dwelling house and the land on which it stands.⁷³ Such a statute is aimed at the grounds as a whole,⁷⁴ and in calculating the distance thereof from dwellings, the authorities must consider not only the dwellings erected but also such as may be erected, allowing for the improvements made in the township.⁷⁵

When so provided by statute the consent of the county or municipal authorities within or near whose limits it is proposed to locate a cemetery is necessary.

Under statutes so providing, the consent of the county or municipal authorities within or near whose limits it is proposed to locate a cemetery is necessary,⁷⁶ unless the owner of the lands is of a class expressly exempted.⁷⁷ Such a statute does not apply to a tract dedicated to cemetery purposes before the enactment of the statute, or to additions or extensions originally dedicated with an existing cemetery although they have never been used,⁷⁸ but it applies to the use of additions or extensions subsequently acquired by an existing cemetery association.⁷⁹

Mode in which obtained. Where the statute so provides, consent and approval must be obtained by written application,⁸⁰ notice of which must be published for a specified period.⁸¹ If the mode in which consent shall be granted is prescribed, such mode must be followed,⁸² but otherwise such consent may be granted by the municipal authorities on motion, and it is not necessary that it be given by ordinance or formal resolution.⁸³ Mere acquiescence by the city is not necessarily sufficient to show consent,⁸⁴ but a long delay in objecting to the use of the land for cemetery purposes may constitute laches barring equitable relief if public health is not involved.⁸⁵ The officers of a city or town may act on applications to approve cemetery locations until the election and qualification of their successors.⁸⁶

It is within the power of the local authorities to limit the consent to a portion of the land described in the application, and it is not a condition precedent to the exercise of their power that the application be limited to the portion finally fixed on.⁸⁷ That applicant is not the owner of the land at the time of filing his application is no ground for refusal of a permit.⁸⁸ Where the statute does not require notice or hearing, the granting or refusing of a permit is not a judicial action,⁸⁹ but it has been held quasi judicial in character, and if the local authorities are improperly influenced the consent is void.⁹⁰ A board of county commissioners in exercising its discretion need not, unless required by constitutional or statutory provisions, accept the advice of a city planning commission or secure its approval.⁹¹

Reconsideration. A resolution once passed may be reconsidered and the amount of property reduced without the publication of a new notice.⁹² However, after a permit has been issued and the grantee has incurred expenses and assumed obligations on the expectation of using the permit, it cannot be rescinded without a hearing.⁹³

Review of action. When so provided by statute, review of the action of the municipality may be had by application to some state board, such as the board of health.⁹⁴ On such appeal the state board acts judicially, and persons interested have a right to be heard.⁹⁵ The state board is not confined to the consideration of sanitary questions, nor is it required to examine witnesses on matters in controversy before it. The determination of the state board on such appeal is presumed to rest on proper grounds, and that presumption can be overcome only by the certificate of the board to the contrary, or by clear proof to the contrary, in case a rule to obtain the board's certificate proves ineffectual.⁹⁶ The granting of the application on a refusal of the local authorities to consent is a reversal of the decisions of the local authorities, and the formal statement that their action is reversed is immaterial.⁹⁷ A review of the legality of a permit may be barred by laches.⁹⁸

A grant of permission will not be reversed by a court of equity where there has been no abuse of discretion.⁹⁹

Assignment of permit. A permit to use certain land for burial purposes is a personal privilege and is not assignable, and even though considered as a grant running with the land, the permit does not attach if the land is not used for burial purposes.¹ Permission obtained by a trustee for the cemetery need not be expressly assigned to the cemetery corporation when it is organized.²

§ 18. — Enjoining Location

Illegal or improper establishment of burial places to the injury of others may be enjoined.

Chancery has jurisdiction to enjoin the establishment of burial places illegally or improperly to the injury of others.³ The injury must, however, be of a positive and substantial character, and not doubtful or contingent.⁴ A private party has no standing in a suit for an injunction except on the ground of nuisance,⁵ and he is not entitled to an injunction where the only probable injury is depreciation in the value of his property.⁶ A city will not be enjoined from using certain lands for cemetery purposes where the lands are the only available and suitable site.⁷ Under a statute which prohibits a cemetery to be laid out within a certain distance of a dwelling house or place of business without the consent of the owner of the same, the property owner may enjoin a threatened establishment of a cemetery if he has not given his consent,⁸ and, likewise, when permission of a city or town, as required by statute, has not been obtained, the city or town may safeguard its interests by injunction,⁹ unless it has been guilty of laches barring equitable relief.¹⁰

§ 19. Acquisition of and Title to Land

A cemetery corporation may acquire property in accordance with statutory authority, but the amount of land which may be acquired may be limited by statute or by its charter. A private cemetery cannot be established or acquired by dedication.

Generally stated, a cemetery corporation may acquire property in a manner in accordance with statutory authorization,¹¹ but by reason of charter or statutory restrictions, the total land which may be acquired may be limited.¹² An act prohibiting the acquisition of land for cemetery purposes by other than existing cemetery corporations applies to prohibit the acquisition of new lands by an existing unincorporated cemetery association.¹³ The acquisition, improvement, and use of an additional tract adjoining a cemetery may be a mere addition within the cemetery corporation's charter and not the creation of a new cemetery although the plots are separated by a street.¹⁴

corporation and the provision for payment is one which the corporation has not power to make, the corporation cannot retain the land without making compensation to the vendor, and where the land cannot be restored to the grantor because of the burial uses to which it has been put with the acquiescence of the grantor, equity will devise a way by which the contract of the parties may be carried out as nearly as possible.¹⁵ Where the sole consideration for a transfer of land to a cemetery corporation was a certificate giving the vendor a share in the proceeds of the subsequent sale of the land by the cemetery company, the cemetery company cannot enforce specific performance of the contract to convey without submitting the question of the validity of the certificate to determination.¹⁶ Where, by statute, a cemetery corporation is required to devote a fixed part of the proceeds of all sales of lots and plots to the payment of purchase money, and the residue to the preservation and embellishment of the cemetery property, a contract by which it attempts to give to the vendors of land purchased by it a share in the proceeds of subsequent sales, without reference to this statutory provision, is invalid.¹⁷ By statute in some jurisdictions provision is made for the creation of a family burying ground or cemetery by a conveyance of the land in trust to the county in which it is situated.¹⁸

A private cemetery cannot be established¹⁹ or acquired²⁰ by dedication. That bodies are buried in graves on private land of another, not dedi-

Act with no repealing clause empowering corporation to sell tracts of land and to acquire additional ground not exceeding one hundred acres did not limit land which it might thereafter purchase to one hundred acres, where it still had authority under prior acts to acquire approximately twenty-five acres. Acts which conferred authority to acquire and hold lands, in each instance not to exceed one hundred acres, and which contained no repealing clauses, were not repugnant to each other and entitled corporation to acquire total of three hundred acres although it had not at time of enactment of last act acquired maximum number of acres it was authorized to under prior acts.—Commonwealth Trust Co. of Pittsburgh v. Allegheny Cemetery, 187 A. 506, 324 Pa. 78.

Use of property. Trustees of a parish cemetery cannot require the parish to account for profits resulting from use of part of the grounds not used for burial purposes where the trustees have acquiesced in the use with no arrangement for an accounting.²²

§ 20. — Title and Rights Acquired

That land is dedicated or conveyed for burial purposes does not necessarily deprive the grantor of the fee, but a conveyance will not be construed to create an estate on condition unless such intent is clearly indicated. Tenancy in common cannot exist with respect to land dedicated as a cemetery.

Legal or equitable title to land dedicated for a cemetery is not destroyed by such dedication,²³ and the fee remains in the original owner and his heirs.²⁴ The right of the public in a duly dedicated public cemetery or the right of relatives of deceased persons in ground dedicated to family burials is a mere easement and not a fee.²⁵

Although land is conveyed for the sole purpose of a burying ground, if it does not appear that the consideration paid was less than its full value, or that the grantor had any interest in or reason for having the land used solely for burial purposes, the conveyance vests in the grantee an absolute estate in fee simple.²⁶ A conveyance will not be construed to create an estate on condition, unless language is used which, according to the rules of law, ex proprio vigore, imports a condition, or the intent of the grantor to make a conditional estate is otherwise clearly and unequivocally indicated,²⁷ but a conveyance will be held to create an estate on condition or a trust for the purpose when a construction of the deed as a whole so indicates.²⁸ A limitation "in trust to have and use as a burying ground" is not a qualification of the estate granted, but of the uses to which, in the hands of the cestui que trust, the land may be applied.²⁹ If the grantee is legally incapable of holding the fee, a deed of the land for burial purposes will not transfer the fee to it.³⁰ When the conveyance is on condition precedent the grantee does not

As it has been held to have been well stated in Corpus Juris, lands once legally devoted to, and used for, burial become appropriated to a public purpose in such a sense that the power of the body in which the legal title may rest to use or alienate the same while such dedication remains in force is restricted,³⁴ and, except as provided by statute, land dedicated for, and used as, a burying ground cannot be sold.³⁵ However, in the absence of statutory prohibition, subject to the rights of the lot owners, the fee of a cemetery may be lawfully sold,³⁶ and so the owner of a cemetery or a cemetery association may sell the land to another person or association for cemetery purposes.³⁷ Also, lands which are not used for burial purposes may be sold so long as lot owners are not deprived of the use of, or access to, their lots and the integrity of the cemetery is not interfered with.³⁸

Where land is conveyed to trustees for cemetery purposes, the surviving trustee cannot pass title by a deed in his individual capacity and can convey it only as trustee, subject to the trust.³⁹ Where it is beyond the power of a cemetery corporation to sell its lands, it must repay with interest money given it for portions thereof.⁴⁰

Abandoned cemetery. In the absence of statutory prohibition, an abandoned cemetery may be alienated.⁴¹

b. Mortgage or Encumbrance

If not in violation of statute or charter provisions, land comprising a cemetery may be mortgaged for cemetery purposes, subject to the rights of the lot owners.

Subject to rights of lot owners, land comprising a cemetery may be mortgaged,⁴² at least, lands on which no interments have been made;⁴³ but a cemetery corporation has no power to mortgage, or to create debts on the faith of, its lands if such is violative of its charter or a statute under which it was incorporated.⁴⁴ So, a cemetery corporation cannot validly mortgage its property for other than cemetery purposes.⁴⁵ Where it is beyond the power of a cemetery corporation to mortgage its cemetery lands, it cannot validate or give legal effect to its void act by ratification or by acceptance of benefits thereunder.⁴⁶ A mortgage on cemetery lands given to secure the purchase price is not a lien on the land, but a lien on one half of the proceeds of the sale of burial lots, where a statute requires the appropriation of such half to the payment of the purchase price.⁴⁷

c. Lease

Cemetery lands may not be leased for other than cemetery purposes without express legislative authority.

Cemetery lands may not be leased for other than cemetery purposes without express legislative authority.⁴⁸ A general grant of power to all membership corporations to lease lands is limited or restricted as to cemeteries when expressly so provided.⁴⁹

d. Sale under Judicial Process; Foreclosure

When so provided by statute an indebtedness against a cemetery corporation cannot be enforced by levy and sale under execution. A valid mortgage may be foreclosed, but the status of the premises and the rights of the lot owners must not be disturbed.

When so provided by statute, an indebtedness against a cemetery corporation cannot be enforced by levy and sale under execution.⁵⁰ A statute permitting lands no longer used for cemetery purposes and cemetery land in which there are no graves or sold lots to be sold under judicial process is constitutional.⁵¹ A valid mortgage of the cemetery, or lien, deed of trust, or land contract may

§ 22. — Abandonment and Reversion to Original Owners

- a. In general
- b. What constitutes
- c. Reversion to original owners

a. In General

A cemetery may be abandoned as a burial place but the doctrine of abandonment which permits appropriation of abandoned property by the first taker does not apply.

A cemetery may be abandoned as a burial place,⁵⁵ especially when expressly so authorized by the legislature,⁵⁶ but the doctrine of abandonment which comprises the voluntary relinquishment of ownership whereby the thing so dealt with ceases to be the property of any person and becomes the subject of appropriation by the first taker, see Abandonment § 1, does not apply to land dedicated and used as a burying ground.⁵⁷ A statute which merely expresses the consent of the state to the abandonment of a cemetery when so desired at the discretion of the governing body of the association does not permit the removal of remains interred therein against the consent of lot owners.⁵⁸ Likewise, it has been held that, when land has been conveyed to a village as a public cemetery, it is not competent for the authorities, in their character of trustees, to abandon the use and thereby defeat the beneficial interest of the public therein.⁵⁹ Notwithstanding a conveyance for cemetery purposes is subject to forfeiture for breach of condition subsequent as to such use, the breach is excused when such further use is prevented by act of law.⁶⁰

b. What Constitutes

A cemetery does not lose its character as such from mere disuse, but it may be said to be abandoned when all the bodies have been removed or the cemetery has been so neglected as entirely to lose its identity as such.

A cemetery does not lose its character as such from mere disuse or because further interment in it has ceased or become impossible,⁶¹ and where

Lien on proceeds from sale of lots

On foreclosure of the vendor's equitable lien on one half of the proceeds of the sale of burial lots, which half a statute provides shall be set aside to pay the purchase price, the value of the land is properly based on its value as a cemetery, including expenditures, since land when dedicated to burial acquires a unique value by grace of its consecration and the exclusiveness of the cemetery franchise. In such foreclosure the interest on the sum found to be the value of the cemetery is improperly allowed, since the principal debt is due and payable out of the proceeds of the sales of lots. Allowance for legal expense incurred in litigation necessary to obtain the cemetery's franchise is improperly allowed as being a duplication included in the valuation of the cemetery, in which the value of the franchise is a material element.—Fidelity Union Trust Co. v. Union Cemetery Ass'n, supra.

premises have been dedicated as a graveyard, they remain subject to that use so long as bodies remain buried there, and until they are removed by public authority, or by friends or relatives.⁶²

As it has been said to have been well stated in Corpus Juris, so long as a cemetery is kept and preserved as a resting place for the dead, with anything to indicate the existence of graves, or so long as it is known or recognized by the public as a cemetery, it is not abandoned,⁶³ but it may be said to be abandoned where all the bodies have been removed,⁶⁴ or the cemetery has been so neglected as entirely to lose its identity as such, and is no longer known, recognized, and respected by the public as a cemetery.⁶⁵ Abandonment may result from inconsistent use, as where the public and those interested in a cemetery have permanently appropriated it to a use or uses entirely inconsistent with its purpose as a cemetery, so that it has become impossible to use it longer for cemetery purposes.⁶⁶

Land abandoned as a cemetery will revert to the original owner unless it has been conveyed absolutely in fee simple.

Where land has been dedicated to cemetery purposes, and there has been a lawful and effectual abandonment of the cemetery as such, the land will revert to the original owner,⁶⁷ but where lands are conveyed absolutely, and in fee simple, there will be no resulting claims, although abandoned for cemetery purposes.⁶⁸ Where the conveyance is made on condition subsequent, the land must be held and used in strict conformity to the terms of the conveyance, and for the use declared; otherwise the heirs of the grantor will become reinvested with the title.⁶⁹ Where lands are conveyed in trust solely for cemetery purposes, no action will lie by the heirs of a grantor to enforce a right of reverter as long as the trust is in force,⁷⁰ but when the trust relation is terminated by the abandonment of the cemetery, it becomes the duty of the trustees to reconvey the property.⁷¹

§ 23. Title and Rights of Owners or Licensees of Grounds, Lots or Graves

§ 24. — Mode of Acquisition

No formal deed is necessary to confer the exclusive right to the use of a lot in a cemetery, nor is it necessary that a certificate of sale be recorded.

No formal deed is necessary to confer the exclusive right to the use of a lot in a cemetery for burial purposes; oral permission from the proprietors is sufficient.⁷³ Likewise, it is not necessary that the deed or certificate of sale be recorded.⁷⁴ Adverse possession of a cemetery lot is treated in the title Adverse Possession §§ 9, 38.

Sale of lots. The power of the president to bind a cemetery corporation by a sales contract may be inferred from evidence that he acted for the corporation in the sale of lots on other occasions, and the corporation, if it has received the consideration for the contract, is estopped to repudiate it.⁷⁵ A contract for the sale of lots executed in his own name by an officer having no personal interest in the transaction is binding on the association without a formal assignment to it, where it takes over the contract, accepts the benefits thereof, and discharges its obligations.⁷⁶ In a suit by a corporation on a contract to purchase lots, an answer alleging that defendant had been excused from payment by an agreement with a corporate officer is demurrable where it fails to allege consideration for the agreement.⁷⁷

§ 25. — Title Acquired

Ordinarily, the purchaser of a lot in a cemetery acquires only a privilege, easement, or license to make interments in the lot purchased, subject to regulations governing the cemetery and to the police power of the state. A contract of sale may be canceled for a mistake of fact or for substantial misrepresentations.

While in some cases under the particular circumstances involved, the purchaser has been held to acquire a fee limited in its use,⁷⁸ ordinarily, the purchaser of a lot in a cemetery, although under a deed absolute in form and containing words of inheritance, is regarded as acquiring only a privilege, easement, or license to make interments in the lot purchased, exclusively of others, so long as the lot remains a cemetery,⁷⁹ and the fee remains

"The right or title acquired under a conveyance of a plot of ground for burial purposes is oftentimes likened to an easement, sometimes to the grant of a pew in a church, and occasionally to both an easement and a license, but probably most frequently to a license or privilege. Although the right created by the conveyance of a lot for burial purposes is not one which, on the one hand, possesses all the inherent and essential qualities of an easement, and, on the other hand, is subject to the limitations and qualifications which control and govern a pure easement, it does possess many of the characteristics of an easement; and it likewise possesses some of the qualities of a license, although it is unaccompanied by some of the characteristics of a license and unaffected by some of the qualifications and limitations which govern and control a pure license. And furthermore, when it is said that the right acquired by the purchaser of a burial lot bears an analogy to a pew tenancy, it must be remembered that the word 'analogy' is used in its strict sense of denoting only a partial similarity, for the likeness between the two rights is not perfect. Occasionally the suggestion is made that a conveyance for burial purposes creates an estate in the nature of a qualified or base fee. The right with which we are now dealing is in reality sui generis, for the reason that the places where the dead sleep are by all humankind treated as holy ground and by us are withdrawn from many of the rules which govern ordinary property; and consequently it is difficult to define or to describe such right when we use words which are usually employed in designating other rights possessing qualities in part similar and in part dissimilar to those inhering in the right of burial."—Mansker v. City of Astoria, supra.

Analogous to grant of pew

A grant of a lot in a cemetery is in the grantor subject to the grantee's right to the exclusive use of the lot for burial purposes.⁶⁰ The lot owner's title to the lot is a legal estate,⁶¹ and his interest is a property right entitled to protection from invasion,⁶² but only in a restricted sense does it constitute an interest in real property.⁶³ The rights of the owner are subject to reasonable rules and regulations governing the cemetery,⁶⁴ and to the police power of the state,⁶⁵ in the exercise of which not only may future interments be prohibited but also the remains of persons theretofore buried may be removed.⁶⁶ Although the owner of a burial lot in which no interment has been made may lose the use of his lot by a law prohibiting interment therein, he is not entitled to compensation on the ground that his property has been taken for a public use.⁶⁷ A statute under which deeds to cemetery lots are executed becomes part of the deeds and no greater or different rights can be conferred by the deeds than are authorized by statute.⁶⁸ Rules and regulations referred to in the contract of sale become part of the contract.⁶⁹

Possession of a burial lot, unless voluntarily relinquished, continues as long as the graves are marked and distinguishable as such and the cemetery continues to be used.⁷⁰ When by lawful authority the ground ceases to be a place of burial, a lot holder's right ceases, except for the purpose of removing remains previously buried.⁷¹ When an inhabitant of a town has acquired a license to use a lot in a public cemetery for burial purposes, his removal from the town does not constitute a revocation of his license or an abandonment of his lot.⁷²

The contract of sale of a cemetery lot may be canceled by the cemetery corporation where, through a mistake of fact, regulations of the corporation which are part of the contract are violated by the sale.⁹⁴ Misrepresentations of a substantial nature by the cemetery association will entitle the purchaser to rescind the contract of sale,⁹⁵ but mere promises of future conduct and condition which were not made dishonestly does not justify rescission although they are not fulfilled.⁹⁶

Record of deed as notice. In the absence of a statute so providing, a record of a deed conveying a lot in a cemetery is not constructive notice to a subsequent purchaser, and when the equities are with the subsequent purchaser, the court will not grant a decree requiring him to remove a body buried there and quieting title in the former purchaser.⁹⁷

The transfer of a cemetery lot is subject to the rules of the cemetery association. After interments have been made, a burial lot can neither be sold nor mortgaged.

The transfer of a cemetery lot is subject to the rules which may be prescribed by the constitution and by-laws of the cemetery association, relative to the recording of such transfers.³ Where charter provisions of a cemetery company prohibit the transfer of lots without the consent of the managers, such provisions will bind grantees, and a transfer without such approval will pass no title,⁴ and when the giving of such consent is not strictly ministerial, a mandamus will not lie to compel the managers to permit a conveyance.⁵ A statute requiring consent of the association does not permit an arbitrary refusal of consent but requires the exercise of a reasonable line of conduct which is based on all the facts and circumstances.⁶ The

§ 28. — Rights in Alleys and Approaches to Lots

The owner of a burial lot has the right to free and unobstructed access thereto and to the use of the necessary driveways and approaches to his lot.

The owner of a burial lot has the right to free and unobstructed access thereto and to the use of the necessary driveways and approaches to his lot.¹⁴ By platting a cemetery and selling the lots with reference to the plat, the association impliedly dedicates the avenues, alleys, and open places for the use of those interested in the lots,¹⁵ and this purpose must not be interfered with.¹⁶ So, a cemetery association may be compelled by a lot owner to keep the walks, drives, and approaches in proper repair.¹⁷ If there are prepared driveways, a lot owner does not acquire, by the purchase of the lot, any right of way to the lot over the grounds of the cemetery which are used or intended for burial purposes.¹⁸ No interest in the alleys which separate a lot from other lots, except a right of way, passes to a purchaser unless particularly expressed in the deed.¹⁹

A license to a lot owner to improve adjacent walks is not irrevocable, and if the lot owner abuses the privilege or exceeds his authority, revocation of the license is justified.²⁰

Construction of tomb in open semicircle

Where lots in a cemetery were sold with reference to a plan showing avenues and an open semicircle, on which the lots fronted, the parish priest could not remove a monument, sell a lot to his mother in the central part of the semicircle, and have a tomb constructed there, as against complaint of lot owners.—Sheean v. Carra, 82 So. 399, 145 La. 440.

§ 29. — Duty to Care for and Repair, and Liability for Negligence

- a. Rights as to care and maintenance
- b. Duties as to care and maintenance

a. Rights as to Care and Maintenance

The purchaser of a burial lot is entitled to care for it either in person or by agent. Trustees of a cemetery are entitled to supervision of lots to prevent them from becoming unsightly.

The purchaser of a burial lot and his successors are entitled to exercise the right to care for the lot,²¹ either in person or by agent,²² subject to reasonable rules and regulations of the cemetery association, see infra § 30. The discontinuance of a burying ground does not deprive the relatives of those buried there of the right to protect the graves from obliteration or desecration,²³ but such right exists only so long as the bodies remain buried there.²⁴ The owner of a lot must not exercise his rights so as to injure others.²⁵

The proprietor of a cemetery is entitled to supervision over the lots to prevent them from becoming unsightly.²⁶

b. Duties as to Care and Maintenance

- (1) In general
- (2) Duty to maintain in safe condition

(1) In General

A cemetery association must care for the lots if so required by statute. A duty imposed by charter to keep the grounds in repair does not include lots sold to individuals.

A provision in a charter of a cemetery association that the association shall, out of the proceeds of sales of lots, keep the grounds in repair and in good order does not charge the association with the duty of caring for and keeping in repair lots which have been sold to individuals for burial purposes.²⁷ Representations by a cemetery association that it will put aside a certain sum to care for the lots as required by statute impose no greater duty than that imposed by the statute.²⁸ In the absence of contract a lot owner is not personally liable to the cemetery association for the ex-

Placing curb around walk

Where plaintiff, who had purchased a circular lot in cemetery established and maintained by defendant city as a public burial place, and who had been given permission by the city council to improve walk and driveway surrounding lot, placed a cement curb around the walk, giving impression to observers that entire area encircled by curb was plaintiff's, it was held that the city was justified in revoking license and requiring removal of curb.—Crawford v. City of Winterset, supra.

Revocation not enjoined

Even though the city council gave plaintiff, who had purchased a circular lot in cemetery established and maintained by defendant city, a right to improve walk surrounding circular tract on which plaintiff had constructed a mausoleum, the right acquired by plaintiff was a revocable license, and court of equity cannot properly enjoin its withdrawal.—Crawford v. City of Winterset, supra.

Right to grade lot

Owner of lots was entitled to reasonable access thereto, as against owner of unsold portions of tract, and could grade and improve them, and remove material therefrom, if reasonably necessary and proper.—Trefry v. Younger, 114 N.E. 1033, 226 Mass. 5.

Manner of supervision

While trustees may not dig into or desecrate graves needlessly, change lot lines, or place posts or new markers where graves are located, they may change condition of lot overgrown with weeds or otherwise become unsightly, and they may have ruined markers repaired or removed and may mark corners of lots with simple markers if they do not disturb graves themselves.—Brown v. Hill, 119 N.E. 977, 284 Ill. 286.

Failure to comply with part of statute as excuse

That a cemetery corporation has failed to comply with one section of a statute does not excuse compliance with other provisions requiring it to set aside a certain percentage of the purchase price of each burial lot for permanent maintenance of the cemetery.—American Cemetery Co. v. U. S., D.C.Kan., 28 F.2d 918.

Suit by bondholders

In suit to compel payment of bonds issued by cemetery association, which had failed to set aside fund for preserving, improving, and embellishing cemetery grounds, as required by statute, it was held that the court had a primary duty to protect rights of lot owners and to insure them care of their lots, and that equities required care of cemetery should receive first consideration.—Dennis v. Glenwood Cemetery, 130 A. 373, 96 N.J.Eq. 399.

pense of caring for the lot.²⁹ A rule of the cemetery giving it authority to remove bodies buried on plots, in case the owner fails to care for such plot in accordance with the regulations of the cemetery, is valid and may be enforced.³⁰

(2) Duty to Maintain in Safe Condition

A cemetery association must keep premises used by lot owners and visitors in a reasonably safe condition.

A cemetery association owes to lot owners and visitors lawfully on the premises the duty to have such parts thereof as are used for travel or occupation by persons attending interments in a reasonably safe condition,³¹ but it is not liable to owners of lots who leave the avenues or ways provided for access to lots and suffer personal injuries on that part of the ground outside of the limits of such ways.³² To recover, plaintiff must show that the association was at fault,³³ and in the absence of proof that the person injured was not a trespasser, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not apply.³⁴ As in civil actions generally, negligence of the cemetery association³⁵ and contributory negligence of plaintiff³⁶ are questions of fact for the jury or for the trial court sitting without a jury.

§ 30. — Regulations of Care and Management of Lots

Proprietors of a cemetery may make rules and regulations for the care and management of lots, but they must be reasonable and uniform in their application.

The proprietors of a cemetery may make rules and regulations for the care and management of lots in the cemetery,³⁷ particularly when expressly authorized by statute.³⁸ The rules and regulations must be reasonable,³⁹ equal in their operation, and uniform in their application to all owners of lots in the cemetery.⁴⁰ A rule prohibiting the owner of a lot previously purchased from caring for his own lot or from hiring his own caretaker is unreasonable,⁴¹ but a rule may require that the work be done by competent persons and it may regulate the manner of doing the work,⁴² or it may require a lot owner or his employee to notify cemetery officials before entering on work in the cemetery.⁴³ If consent of the superintendent is required, provision must be made as to how it shall be obtained.⁴⁴ The fact that a certificate conferring the right of burial in a cemetery states that it is subject to such regulations as may from time to time be prescribed authorizes the imposition of regulations in addition to those expressly stated in the certificate.⁴⁵

A cemetery association may establish annual and perpetual care rates leaving acceptance thereof optional,⁴⁶ but it cannot require the owner of a lot previously purchased to pay rates or to contribute to an endowment fund for the care of all lots in the cemetery,⁴⁷ even if the owner has neglected the care of his lot; and although the lot was conveyed subject to rules and regulations.⁴⁸

cemeteries to levy assessments on cemetery lots for improvements is not invalid as taking property without due process, and to warrant an assessment under such a statute, it is not necessary that all the lots assessed are occupied by dead bodies.⁴⁹

An incorporated cemetery may use the police power of the state for enforcement of its statutory powers.⁵⁰

§ 31. — Right of Burial

The right of burial in a burying ground is an easement, license, or privilege subject to reasonable rules and regulations of the proprietor of the cemetery.

A decent burial in a suitable place is the right of everyone, springing from the necessities of the case, and is recognized in all well-ordered communities,⁵¹ but the privilege of burial in any particular cemetery must be founded on some title or right recognized by law.⁵² The right of burial in a particular plot in a burying ground is an easement, license, or privilege,⁵³ which may be lost

Unreasonable enforcement of rule requiring consent

A rule requiring the written authority of the commission charged by law with the superintendence of the cemetery before any professional gardener or other person for hire can be employed to care for a lot is unreasonably enforced by the arbitrary refusal to grant permission to a lot owner to employ a suitable person to care for the lot, because in the opinion of the commission it can furnish material and perform the work required cheaper than the service may elsewhere be obtained.—Nicolson v. Daffin, 83 S.E. 658, 142 Ga. 729, L.R.A.1915E 168 and note.

Ordinance held unconstitutional

An ordinance of a city prohibiting one from dressing or keeping any grave or burial lot in a public cemetery for compensation, without consent of superintendent thereof, was held unreasonable and unconstitutional, being an unlawful restriction on a useful and harmless avocation, and because not uniform in its application to all owners of lots, no condition being specified as to how the consent of the superintendent should be gained.—Ex parte Adlof, 215 S.W. 222, 86 Tex.Cr. 13.

Future possibilities

Where plaintiff's lot was not overgrown with weeds or brush, and in fact seemed too bare of growth, a regulation of the municipal cemetery commission requiring plaintiff to furnish a fund to care perpetually for the lot and keep it free from weeds and brush cannot be sustained on the theory that it might in the future become overgrown.—Mansker v. City of Astoria, supra.

48. Or.—Mansker v. City of Astoria, supra.

Increase in rates

It has been held that a lot owner is not personally liable to pay a rate for the care of the lot prescribed in the regulations where it is an increase over the rate in the regulations at the time of purchase, although the purchaser took the lot subject to regulations of the association.—Monett Lodge No. 106 I. by abandonment of the land as a burying ground.⁵⁴ The right carries with it the privilege to bury according to the usual custom in the neighborhood,⁵⁵ but it is subject to the reasonable rules and regulations promulgated by the proprietor of the cemetery or burying ground;⁵⁶ however, where there is no restriction of the right of sepulture on the purchase of a lot, the managers of the cemetery have no power afterward to abridge such right by any unreasonable limitation thereon.⁵⁷ Rules and regulations may include a requirement that interments be made in vaults or inclosed in stone, brick, or concrete,⁵⁸ but not a provision preventing the use of grave boxes or vaults not furnished by the proprietor of the cemetery.⁵⁹ A cemetery corporation has the right to limit all interments in lots to members of the family owning lots and the relatives of such persons,⁶⁰ or to members of the white race.⁶¹ Subject to the regulations of the cemetery, the owner of a burial lot may permit the interment of any relative, or even a stranger, in his lot;⁶² but in the case of two or more joint owners, no one has that right; it would require the consent of all.⁶³ Where lots are sold for use for burial purposes only, the lot owner is not entitled to bury a pet dog on his plot.⁶⁴

A cemetery association may require a person to establish his interest in the plot by documentary proof or affidavit before permitting interment therein.⁶⁵

A statute which permits the owner of a lot to revoke the designation of persons or classes of persons in whose favor interments have been restricted, has been held to apply to the original owner and not to his descendants.⁶⁶

Religious restrictions. One who secures the privilege of burial in a cemetery subject to the charge and control of a religious organization takes the right subject to the rules of such organization, which may limit the right of interment to its members or to those who die in communion with it.⁶⁷

Omission of name of person entitled to burial

One who merely wrote letter to church listing persons entitled to burial in cemetery plot was held not liable to person whose name was omitted for damages for mental anguish resulting from delay in interment of latter's mother.—Smith v. Rector, etc., of Trinity Church in City of New York, supra.

Must show right to burial

Father who was not a member of church which operated cemetery was held not entitled to compel church to permit burial of his daughter in cemetery, in absence of any showing of title, contract, or right, through membership or otherwise.—Brnilovich v. St. George Independent Serbian Orthodox Church of Pittsburgh, South Side, Pa., 191 A. 655.

Relatives of deceased buried in cemetery

That relatives of father who was seeking permission to bury his daughter in cemetery operated by church to which father did not belong were buried in cemetery was held not to confer upon father right to future burials in the land, but at most gave him only right to protect

Even those who are members of the congregation have no right to burial except such as is conferred by the church laws.⁶⁸ Whether a person is in communion with a religious organization and entitled to burial in its cemetery is purely a question over which the church itself has exclusive jurisdiction, and must be determined by the proper ecclesiastical authorities.⁶⁹ However, the cemetery association has the burden of establishing an asserted violation of a regulation justifying refusal of interment to a deceased who committed suicide.⁷⁰

§ 32. — Crypts and Mausoleums

The purchaser of a crypt in a mausoleum is entitled to a deed. Ownership of a tomb is subject to conditions prescribed by the proprietor of the cemetery.

A contract to "deed" a crypt in a mausoleum free of encumbrances is not satisfied by a certificate of ownership, but the purchaser is entitled to a deed capable of being recorded. A tender of a certificate of ownership of a crypt in a mausoleum to authorize recovery of the purchase price must be kept good by being brought into court. Further, a corporation contracting to convey such a crypt by deed cannot recover on the tender of a certificate of ownership, executed by another corporation which acquired title subsequently to the date of the certificate.⁷¹ The ownership of a tomb is subject to conditions prescribed by the proprietor of the cemetery.⁷² The rights of a licensee of a burial vault depend on the terms of the contract under which the vault is held.⁷³ Under a statute permitting a lot owner to erect a monument on his lot, a lot owner may erect a tomb or burial vault wholly or partly above the ground.⁷⁴

§ 33. — Tombstones and Monuments

A lot owner may erect proper tombstones and monuments subject to reasonable rules of the cemetery. Monuments and erections capable of being removed are the property of the lot holder.

The right of sepulture in a burial lot, as a general rule, carries with it the right of erecting monuments or memorial tablets over the graves therein.⁷⁵ This right is, however, subject to reasonagraves from unlawful desecration.—Brnilovich v. St. George Independent Serbian Orthodox Church of Pittsburgh, South Side, supra.

Prior operation on nonsectarian basis

That cemetery had been operated upon a nonsectarian basis by cemetery corporation prior to cemetery being acquired by church organization was held not to estop church organization to deny to public the use of the land for burial purposes on the payment of prescribed fee, since land was not dedicated to public merely because it was used for purposes permitted by charter of cemetery corporation.—Brnilovich v. St. George Independent Serbian Orthodox Church of Pittsburgh, South Side, supra.

Effect of charter to maintain public burying ground

Cemetery operated by church organization is not a "public cemetery" open to public on a nondiscriminatory basis because of provisions in church charter stating that collateral purpose for its being organized was to maintain a "public burial ground," since "public" as used in charter meant those who were members of church in good standing.—Brnilovich v. St. George Independent Serbian Orthodox Church of Pittsburgh, South Side, supra.

Removal of body

(1) Mandamus will not lie against Catholic cemetery authorities to permit removal of body to unconsecrated ground after long lapse of time, although burial in cemetery was intended to be temporary and removal contemplated, where such agreement was not known by cemetery authorities and if known would have resulted in refusal of burial in first instance.—Hoppe v. Cathedral Cemetery, 43 Pa.Co. 53.

ble rules of the cemetery,⁷⁶ the rights of the lot owner,⁷⁷ and such reasonable control as a court of equity should exercise to prevent infraction of the recognized rules of propriety.⁷⁸ The purchaser of a burial lot may not erect improper monuments or such as bear improper inscriptions,⁷⁹ and if any of the markers or monuments on a lot fall into a ruinous condition, so as to disfigure the rest of the cemetery, the proprietor may cause them to be repaired or removed.⁸⁰

Ownership. All monuments and erections capable of being removed, placed on burial lots under a license, will be regarded as the personal property of the lot holder, and he has the right to remove the same when the lot ceases to be used for purposes of burial.⁸¹ The property in a tombstone remains in the person who erects it, and after his death passes to the heirs.⁸²

§ 34. — Remedies

Interference with the rights of a lot owner may be basis for a cause of action for damages or it may be prevented by injunction.

An unlawful and unwarranted interference with the exercise of the right of burial in a cemetery lot is a tort which gives a cause of action against the wrongdoer.⁸³ The chancery court has jurisdiction to protect the rights of a lot owner and an infringement of his rights may be prevented by injunction.⁸⁴ For a lot owner to be entitled to an

Right of heir to compel removal

Where the right to bury the body of the deceased husband of a granddaughter of the original purchaser of a cemetery lot was given by all heirs of such purchaser and was acquiesced in by the cemetery association, an heir could not insist on the removal of a headstone over such husband's grave, against the wishes of any of the other heirs or against the wishes of the widowed granddaughter, who erected the headstone, although it bore the name of the deceased husband only.—*Donohue v. Requirement that foundations be built by cemetery association

A rule of a cemetery, requiring all foundations for monuments to be built by the cemetery association, was held unreasonable as depriving lot owner, who otherwise conforms to reasonable rules of cemetery, of his privilege of personally caring for and adorning his graves, or having it done by those of his own selection.—*Chariton Cemetery Co. v. Interference with contract

Plaintiff contracting with cemetery lot owner to construct mausoleum could sue to restrain cemetery association from interfering with contract.—Tonella v. Fishkill Rural Cemetery, 236 N.Y.S. 663, 135 Misc. 81, affirmed 241 N.Y.S. 851, 229 App. Div. 732, affirmed 175 N.E. 338, 255 N.Y. 617.

Enjoining refusal of burial permits

The refusal of burial permits to injunction, an injury to a right must be threatened or invaded,⁸⁵ and he must not be guilty of laches.⁸⁶ The managers of a cemetery may be compelled by mandamus to permit the burial of persons entitled to sepulture therein.⁸⁷ If the owner of a vault in violation of a lease thereof disturbs the interments therein, the lessee may sue for breach of contract.⁸⁸ An owner of a lot in a denominational cemetery has no such property rights as are enforceable in equity, where in accordance with the rules and regulations of the religious organization, burial is refused.⁸⁹ The mere fact that a coowner of a cemetery lot objects to his coowner using the property for his own exclusive benefit and advantage does not, of itself, give rise to a cause of action for damages.⁹⁰

A statute which prescribes remedies for the enforcement of the duty of cemetery corporations to establish improvement funds has been held valid,⁹¹ but a statute which declares an antecedent failure of a cemetery corporation to set up an improvement fund to be a personal charge against present officers is invalid.⁹²

§ 35. Trespasses and Offenses

compel compliance with an unreasonable regulation may be enjoined.—Mansker v. City of Astoria, 198 P. 199, 100 Or. 435, petition denied 199 P. 381, 100 Or. 435.

Submission of dispute to association

Inclusion of other relief

In entering a decree for an injunction against the enforcement of a by-law prohibiting a person from hiring anyone to take care of his lot, the court will not include the right of the lot owner to grade at will.—Benson v. Laurel Hill Cemetery Co., 68 Pa.Super. 242.

Evidence

(1) Evidence in suit to restrain interference with construction of mausoleum was held not to show proposed mausoleum was injurious to surrounding lots.—*Tonella v. (2) In a suit by the owner of a cemetery lot to enjoin the cemetery association from enforcing against her its endowment plan for caring for the lots, which had been adopted after she purchased her lot, evidence was held not to sustain the association's contention that plaintiff's lot had been neglected so as to be a nuisance, and that the cemetery association had expended funds received for other purposes on the care of that lot.—*Mansker v. Mere sentiment or temper

To warrant an injunction, the threatened injury or invasion must be something more than that resulting from mere sentiment or temper.—Perkins v. Lawrence, 138 Mass. 361.

Suit to restrain removal of tree on defendant's lot

Permanent injunction will not be granted at suit of owner of lot in cemetery against owner of adjoining lot, on which there is an ornamental tree shading plaintiff's lot, to prevent the owner of the lot where tree is located from cutting down, removing, or destroying the tree to prepare for burial purposes.—Earhart v. Mt. Vernon Cemetery Ass'n, 227 P. 351, 116 Kan. 437.

Alterations for improvement of cemetery

A lot owner has no standing in equity to complain of alterations made in good faith for the general improvement of the cemetery, and not impairing the value of his lot or his means of access to it.—Perkins v. Lawrence, 138 Mass. 361.

Operation of mortuary

(1) Cemetery lot owner who suffers no injury or damage and whose rights are not invaded and whose easement is not interfered with, and who cannot establish that maintenance of mortuary in cemetery impairs beauty and value of his lot, nor convenience of ingress to, or egress from, lot, cannot complain of nor enjoin operation of mortuary.—Vesper v. Forest Lawn Cemetery Ass'n, Cal.App., 67 P.2d 368.

(2) Owner of private cemetery lot is not entitled to injunctive relief against operation of mortuary in cemetery on ground that owner had vested right in cemetery and to uses to which cemetery might be put, and that right had been invaded by the mortuary, in absence of injury to owner.—Vesper v. Forest Lawn Cemetery Ass'n, supra.

§ 36. — Civil Liability

- a. Right to, and nature of, remedy
- b. Who may sue
- c. Who liable
- d. Pleading
- e. Evidence
- f. Damages

a. Right to, and Nature of, Remedy

An action at law or a suit in equity may be resorted to as a remedy against desecration or wrongful invasion of burial grounds or lots.

An action of trespass for damages may be brought against a person who desecrates or wrongfully invades burial grounds or the burial lot of another,⁹³ or recourse may be had to equity to restrain a threatened trespass or for other relief.⁹⁴ When occasion warrants, equity will command removal of bodies wrongfully interred in another's lot.⁹⁵ A statute prohibiting the willful and malicious destruction and disfigurement of a tombstone does not warrant an injunction restraining defendant from moving a tombstone which is partially on the adjacent lot.⁹⁶ The right to damages for a negligent or willful invasion of a graveyard may be lost by leaving the ground uncared for.⁹⁷ The owner of a cemetery lot is entitled to all remedies which the law affords as if he owned a fee simple.⁹⁸

Where there are circumstances which will warrant a change of location of a cemetery and the removal of the bodies interred therein, there is no absolute right to prevent removal of remains buried there, or other use of the land, but the rights of all parties are bounded by rules of propriety and reasonableness determinable by a court of equity on due application.⁹⁹

The owner or proprietor of a cemetery, one with an easement or right of burial in a cemetery plot, and near relatives of deceased persons buried in the cemetery have a right to prevent desecration or interference with graves.

When one buries his dead in soil to which he has the freehold right or to the possession of which he is entitled, there is no difficulty in his protecting their graves from insult and injury by an action of trespass against a wrongdoer.¹ This right is

Malicious injury under statute

Under a statute providing that, if anyone willfully and maliciously injures any fence or other erection in or about a burial ground, he shall be liable to an action for damages, one is not liable for removing a stone wall from about a burial ground, where such removal was not done maliciously.—Fletcher v. Justification for refusal to remove bodies

Where because of lack of orderliness in location of graves in country churchyard two bodies were unintentionally buried in lot belonging to another family, considerations of respect for the dead and regard for feelings of their kindred and friends were held not to justify refusal of their relatives to move bodies.—Brunton v. Roberts, 97 S.W.2d 413, 265 Ky. 569, 107 A.L.R. 1289.

Laches

Where two bodies had been buried by mistake in cemetery lot belonging to another family, suit to compel removal of bodies was held not barred by laches, although about ten years had elapsed since one burial and about twenty years since the other, since no disadvantage resulted to defendants because of such delay.—Brunton v. The measure of damages for injury resulting from a wrongful invasion of plaintiff's lot or burial ground will be the cost of restoration if that is the most economical method of repairing the injury,¹⁹ and it will not be the difference in market value of the land before and after the alleged trespass.²⁰ While the breaking and entering of plaintiff's close is the gist of the action, the circumstances accompanying the trespass and which give character to it may be shown and considered for trespass on lot allegedly in possession of plaintiff and other heirs, sale contract therefor between defendant and plaintiff's father, and deed conveying lot to father's estate, even if insufficient as muniment of title, could be regarded as color of title to be considered in connection with possessory acts.—*Holder v. in mitigation or aggravation of the act.²¹ Plaintiff has the burden of showing the essential elements authorizing an award of damages.²² Where a corpse is wrongfully disinterred, one on whom rests the duty of reinterment may recover from the wrongdoer the expense thereby incurred.²³ The jury may take into consideration not only the injury to the property but also the injured feelings of plaintiff,²⁴ but where the interred bodies have not been disturbed, the next of kin without interest in the land, cannot recover for mental suffering.²⁵

Nominal damages only will be assessed where the acts complained of were done in good faith,²⁶ and where no special damages were shown and no expenses were incurred;²⁷ but where some damages have been sustained, plaintiff is entitled to more than nominal damages.²⁸

Exemplary damages. The general rule that, where the injury has been wanton and malicious or the result of gross negligence or reckless disregard of the rights of others equivalent to an intentional violation of them, exemplary damages may be awarded is applicable in suits for damages for the disinterment of dead bodies,²⁹ for interference with the right of burial,³⁰ and for burying a person in plaintiff's lot without his consent.³¹

§ 37. — Criminal Responsibility

- a. Nature and elements of offenses
- b. Indictment and trial

a. Nature and Elements of Offenses

In some jurisdictions desecration of, or injury to, burying grounds or monuments is a statutory offense of which intent is usually an important element.

Under statutes so providing, the desecration of, or injury to, burying grounds or monuments, or the destruction of, or injury to, fences or trees on the land, is a specific offense.³² The intent is usually an important element of such offenses,³³ but where one intends the wrongful act prohibited, other good intention will not avail him.³⁴ Under a statute prohibiting the destruction of any inclosure for the burial of the dead, a prosecution will lie against one who destroys a line fence between his land and a cemetery.³⁵ A mere trespass or indignity subjected to a grave does not constitute the crime of malicious injury to a grave.³⁶

Where an ordinance prohibits the burial of a human body within a prescribed district, and makes the sale or purchase of a lot therein for burial purposes a misdemeanor, such sale or purchase does not amount to a misdemeanor until the offense of such burial has been committed.³⁷ Such an ordinance is a valid exercise of the police power.³⁸

The indictment must adequately describe the offense. Competent evidence is admissible and it must be sufficient to show commission of the crime by defendant to sustain a conviction.

In indictments for statutory offenses of this nature, it is generally necessary and sufficient to charge the offense in the words of the statute,³⁹ but even though the indictment is not phrased in the strict language of the statute, it is sufficient if it adequately describes the offense.⁴⁰ The indictment must mention the cemetery, but it is not essential that it should be described by metes and bounds;⁴¹ neither is it necessary to allege any ownership of the same,⁴² nor to state whether such cemetery is a public or a private ground, when the offense relates to either.⁴³

Testimony by defendant as to his understanding of his rights is admissible on the issue of willfulness.⁴⁴ In a prosecution for disturbing a private burying ground, the deed reserving the burying ground is admissible.⁴⁵

To sustain a conviction the evidence must show that the crime was committed,⁴⁶ and that defendant was the perpetrator thereof.⁴⁷ The court in its charge to the jury may give the statute upon which the indictment is based.⁴⁸

CEMETERY WORK. In a particular connection the term has been defined as meaning the work of platting, grading, planting, beautifying, and maintaining a tract of land in such manner as to render it a proper place for sepulture of the dead, and to preserve it as such.¹

Affidavit

An affidavit which states that the prosecuting witness had probable cause for believing and did believe that defendant willfully removed a fence about monuments, gravestones, and memorials, and willfully cut or injured trees within the inclosure is sufficient to charge the offense.—Young v. State, 147 So. 650, 25 Ala. App. 413.

Injury to private burying ground

Indictment alleging that accused willfully injured private burying ground by digging into graves was held to charge violation of statute penalizing mutilation or injuring of private burying ground, and was held not demurrable for failure to allege that private burying ground allegedly injured by accused had been reserved in sale of surrounding land, where indictment alleged that there had not been any sale of surrounding land.—Pritchett v. State, 179 S.E. 915, 51 Ga.App. 228.

Not contrary to American law in Puerto Rico

"It probably cannot be denied that a censo redimible existing at the date of the treaty of Paris in favor of a defendant remained good thereafter. Neither can we find that such a censo is contrary to any law of the United States applicable in Porto Rico against perpetuities. It is doubtful, even, if such a perpetuity as this is, is repugnant to the law of any state of the Union. It does not appear to be of the kind that is legislated against by the American states, even though such censos are not much in use throughout the nation."—U. S. v. considering question whether public interest, convenience, or necessity would be served by renewal of applicant's license the commission held merely to have exercised its right to take note of applicant's past conduct, which is not censorship.—KFKB Broadcasting Ass'n v. § 1. Definitions

"Census," in its ordinary meaning refers to an official enumeration of the population of a country or district;¹ an official enumeration of the population of a country or of a city or other administrative district.² In general, a census must be an official enumeration of the people, and, as such, a public record, containing not merely a sum total, but an official list, of the names of all the inhabitants preserved in the public archives and, except in so far as the statute under which it is taken prescribes otherwise, subject to public inspection.³ In old European law, a census was "a tax, or tribute; a toll";⁴ while in Roman law it was "a numbering or enrollment of the people, with a valuation of their fortunes."⁵

§ 2. When and under What Authority Taken

A census is generally taken under the authority of the constitutional or statutory provisions of a particular administrative unit and at such times as are provided therein.

Under express provisions of the constitution of the United States, article 1 § 2 paragraph 3, a census of the United States is taken once in every ten years, the methods of taking and administrative details being provided for from time to time by congress, which has exclusive authority over matters regarding the national census.⁶

Censuses of the various states are also ordinarily taken once in ten years under the provisions of the various state constitutions and acts of the legislature, and where the legislature has provided a method of determining population, that method is exclusive.⁷ Where a constitutional provision requires the taking of a census from the first of May in a specified year, and further requires a census to be taken in another year and every tenth year thereafter, it is within the power of the legislature to fix, as to any census subsequent to the first, a date other than the first of May as the time when it shall be taken.⁸ Where a state constitution required the taking of a census at certain regular periods, an act of the legislature providing for such an enumeration seven years after the prescribed period is constitutional, such enactment having been neglected by previous sessions of the legislature.⁹

Under an express or an implied power, a municipal corporation may take a census pursuant to an ordinance, although a federal census has been taken but a short time before,¹⁰ especially where territory has been added in the meantime.¹¹ Where, however, a municipal corporation has no such implied powers, obviously the power to take a census must be expressly granted.¹² Accordingly, where a municipality is by statute granted the power to take a census for certain purposes, it cannot take a census for other purposes.¹³ A municipal body cannot determine, or declare by its ordinance, the population of a town or city without any previous census or enumeration of the inhabitants thereof.¹⁴

§ 3. Scope and Extent

The scope and extent of a census is limited to the provisions of the legislation under which the census is taken.

Although the provisions of the federal constitution merely direct congress to take a census of the population for the purpose of apportioning representatives and direct taxes, laws requiring additional information concerning property and other like matters are constitutional.¹⁵ However, in case no details are expressly required except the enumeration of the inhabitants, it has been held that no matters can be inquired into except such as appertain to the individual, as sex, age, nationality, etc.¹⁶ Under a statute or constitutional provision requiring a census to be taken of legal voters, a legal voter is one who possesses all the constitutional qualifications required to entitle one to be a voter and who has become registered as a voter in accordance with the statutes.¹⁷

§ 4. Officers

The appointment, powers and functions, and compensation of officers to take a census is usually a matter of statutory regulation.

The federal director of the census is invested with discretion in matters of form and procedure when these are not specifically provided for by law, and the exercise of this authority cannot be controlled by state legislation.¹⁸ A federal statute requiring that preference be given to honorably discharged soldiers in making appointments to positions in the executive branch of the government has been held not to apply to positions created by an act to make a business census, where it was clear that congress did not so intend when passing census act.¹⁹

A state statute providing for the taking of a census at certain intervals and making it the governor's duty to appoint a superintendent of the census at least six months before each interval is directory only as to time of appointment.²⁰

Under some state statutes the county commissioners have no jurisdiction or control over the taking of the enumeration of the county, and have no authority to amend or revise it.²¹

Compensation. The compensation to which an officer or an agent is entitled is ordinarily specified by the act under which he is appointed.²² Where the statute does not fix the compensation of census special agents, but only a maximum beyond which they cannot be paid, the compensation may be fixed by the appointing power within such limitation;²³ but the compensation specified in an agent's commission cannot be reduced by a rule of the department, of which rule the agent has not been informed.²⁴ The fact that one is to be paid by the day contemplates a daily service.²⁵

§ 5. Making Enumeration

The processes of making an enumeration are generally governed by statutory enactment. Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 6. Compilation and Publication of Returns

In the absence of a statute providing when the census shall go into legal effect, it becomes official as of the date of the publication of returns.

Where the statute provides a method by which a census shall become final, a census does not go into legal effect until there has been a compliance with the statute.²⁶ In the absence of a statute requiring any formal action by the census board or the legislature, a census goes into legal effect, as such, on its compilation and publication by the census superintendent or board.²⁷ It is generally held that a census, after it has been officially determined²⁸ or ascertained and published,²⁹ does not relate back and give the fact force as of the date of which the census was to be taken; but it has also been held that a census, being the enumeration of the population and not the announcement of the result, becomes effective as of the date taken.³⁰ An authorized announcement of a federal census is official, even though not final,³¹ and expressly subject to correction.³²

No official notice can be taken of a census until it goes into legal effect,³³ and changes in classifications based on the census are not permissible until there has been a legal ascertainment of the fact of increase by means of official publication or announcement.³⁴

Effect of census. The population of a particular district for official purposes is determined by the last census and not by the actual population of the district at the time in question.³⁵ A federal tabulation or census has no force within a state, except as provided by the constitution or laws of the state, but it is the best evidence of the number of inhabitants which can be obtained.³⁶ Until the complete and certified work of census enumerators, who are constituted public officers and have qualified as such, is impeached by proper and sufficient evidence, it must be given the credit accorded by law to other official acts.³⁷ A municipal census, when taken, is conclusive, in the absence of any averment of fraud or mistake,³⁸ and is not subject to collateral attack.³⁹

26. Iowa.—Broyles v. Mahaska County, 239 N.W. 1, 213 Iowa 345.

Certification by secretary of state

Where the publication of the census is to be under the secretary of state's certification, the date of such certification determines the date on which the census becomes effective. Accordingly, where the secretary of state did not certify 1925 census of Iowa until February 1, 1926, census did not become effective until such date.—Broyles v. Mahaska County, supra.

Certification to governor

A census made by an individual acting under a resolution of the town, sworn to be correct by this individual, is not conclusive proof of the population of the town, since the statute makes it necessary that the census be certified to the governor, that the facts under which it is taken be investigated by him, and that a proclamation be issued and published by the governor in response to the census.—State ex rel. Garland v. Dietlein, 2 La.App. 572, certified questions answered 104 So. 56, 158 La. 314.

Entry on records

Where the statute provides that the result of a municipal census shall be entered on the records of the body having legislative functions, the affidavits of the enumerators, such action not having been taken, are not prima facie evidence of the correctness of the census.—

Ratification of void census. Where a municipal census is void for technical irregularities, it may be ratified by the city authorities; but they are not required to treat it as valid unless they are willing so to do.⁴⁰

Recanvass. Where the ordinance under which a municipal census is taken does not confine any enumerator to any particular part of the work, the council and the mayor may have the work of some of the enumerators recanvassed by another, particularly where the enumeration is not to be complete until the result is declared by the ordinance of the council adopting the completed work of their enumerators.⁴¹

Publication of bulletins. The fact that a bulletin of the United States census originally prepared by a special census agent is accepted by the superintendent of the census, and approved by the secretary of the interior under whose direction the work was done, does not bind the census office to publish it in its original form.⁴²

§ 7. Making False Return

It is usually, under the statutes, an indictable offense to make a false or fictitious census return.

The making of a false or fictitious census return in the federal decennial census is an indictable offense.⁴³ Even in making correction or additions to his schedules after their return, the enumerator acts in his official capacity and subject to the penalties prescribed for making false returns.⁴⁴ Although an enumerator in a federal census alone may be able to commit the misdemeanor of willfully and knowingly making a false certificate or fictitious return, nevertheless all persons who conspire with such enumerator may be punished under a federal statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 55, providing a punishment for persons who conspire to commit an offense against the United States, although they may be incapable themselves of doing the overt act.⁴⁵

Indictment. The offense of falsifying census returns is created and defined by statute and an information charging such offense in the words of the statute is sufficient.⁴⁶ An indictment for making a false and fictitious census return need not charge that it was made to the supervisor of the district, he being the only one authorized to receive it; nor need it allege that the return was made on a prescribed and adopted form; nor is the indictment defective because a portion of such return contains information not required by statute and omits information which is so required.⁴⁷

§ 8. Refusal to Furnish Information

Where so provided by statute, it is an indictable offense to refuse to furnish an enumerator with required information.

Under a statute which so provides, it is a misdemeanor to refuse to render to the census enumerator the required information.⁴⁸ This information required by statute to be furnished is not limited merely to population and sex, but may include a knowledge of one's possessions, business, or profession.⁴⁹ The exaction of a penalty for refusal to give certain information is ineffective, however, in the absence of any statute requiring such information to be given.⁵⁰ A refusal to furnish information under a question which is not authorized by statute to be propounded by the enumerator, does not subject the person refusing to answer to a statutory prosecution for such refusal.⁵¹

CENT. One of the minor coins of the United States,² a common abbreviation being "c" or "ct.," see Abbreviations 1 C.J.S. p 276 note 5.

Phrase: "Dollars and cents."³

CENTAVO. In the Spanish speaking countries, a copper cent or nickel coin in value six tenths of a cent (actual) and one cent (nominal); the one hundredth part of a peso.⁴

CENTENA. Law Latin, in general, a hundred.⁵ Also, in old records and pleadings, a hundred-weight.⁶

CENTENARII. Petty judges, under-sheriffs of counties, who had rule of a hundred (centena), and judged smaller matters among them.⁷

CENTENI. The principal inhabitants of a "centena," or district composed of different villages, originally in number a hundred, but afterward only called by that name.⁸

CENTER or CENTRE. In its strict, scientific sense, the primary meaning of the word is the point or place equally distant from the extremities or from the different sides of anything; but it has been held that, ordinarily, the word does not necessarily mean, and is not necessarily limited to, the precise geographical or mathematical center; and that, giving it a sense in which it is used in common parlance, the term means the middle or central point or portion of anything;⁹ also something between two other objects.¹⁰

Center line. As applied to public highways and railroads the term means the line equidistant from each of the side lines of the roadway proper, and is usually the line surveyed when the road is laid out;¹¹ the one that bisects the middle line of the usable road.¹²

sonably certain,"¹⁰ and "sum certain in money."¹¹

CERTAINLY. An adverb, as used in the phrase "certainly impending."¹²

CERTAINTY. A term which has been defined generally as meaning absence of doubt,¹³ or free from doubt.¹⁴

In a legal sense, sufficient positive facts so proved as to take a matter out of the realm of conjecture and presumption;¹⁵ and more specifically, in a particular connection, a clear and distinct setting down of facts, so that they may be understood both by the party who is to answer the matters stated against him, the counsel who are to argue them, the jury who will decide upon their existence, and the court who will be the judges of the law arising out of them.¹⁶ While it has been said that we have no precise idea of the signification of the word, which is as indefinite in itself as any word that can be used,¹⁷ a distinction has long been made between three manner of certainties: (1) Certainty to a common intent which describes the mode of statement in which words are used in their ordinary meaning, although by argument or inference they may be made to bear a different one.¹⁸ (2) Certainty to a certain intent in general, which is in general what upon a fair and reasonable construction may be called certain, without recurring to possible facts which do not appear.¹⁹ (3) To a certain intent in every particular, which is that technical accuracy of statement which precludes all question, inference, or presumption against the party pleading.²⁰

Moral certainty. A certainty beyond a reasonable doubt;²¹ a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it;²² that degree of proof which produces conviction in an unprejudiced mind;²³ that degree of proof which the law requires of moral evidence;²⁴ that full and complete assurance which

CERTIFICANDO DE RECOGNITIONE STAPULÆ. Latin, literally "For certifying as to a recognition of a staple."⁴⁹ In English law, a writ commanding the mayor of the staple to certify to the lord chancellor a statute-staple taken before him where the party himself detains it, and refuses to bring in the same.⁵⁰

CERTIFICATE. A certificate in its most general and widest sense has been defined as meaning a certain assurance of that which it states;⁵¹ a declaration in writing;⁵² an authoritative attestation;⁵³ a writing giving assurance that a thing has or has not been done, that a fact exists or does not exist;⁵⁴ a written testimony to the truth of any fact;⁵⁵ the usual and customary method to indicate what has or has not been done.⁵⁶

More specifically, the word has been defined as meaning a documentary declaration regarding facts from the public authority, as an attestation of facts contained in a public record;⁵⁷ a statement in writing by a person having a public or official status concerning some matter within his knowledge or authority;⁵⁸ a writing by which an officer or other person bears testimony that a fact has or has not taken place;⁵⁹ a writing so signed and authenticated as to be legal evidence;⁶⁰ also a writing made in any court and properly authenticated to give notice to another court of anything done therein.⁶¹

Strictly speaking, a certificate by a public officer may be said to be a statement written and signed, but not necessarily nor usually sworn to, which is by law made evidence of the truth of the facts stated for all or for certain purposes;⁶² and, popularly, the term has been held to import a completed document;⁶³ a document in which the officer issuing the same purports to state on his own authority that certain acts have been done;⁶⁴ the statement of some fact, in writing, signed by the party certifying;⁶⁵ and that the certificate testifies to the truth.⁶⁶ Official certificates must be duly authenticated or they cannot serve that purpose, although, in the absence of special requirements, no set form is necessary.⁶⁷

(1) Where a judge, upon the statement of counsel that "he was going, or would go, immediately to the clerk of this court and give his personal check for the payment of these [specified] costs," issued his certificate that "all the costs . . . have been paid;" but it subsequently developed that such costs had not been, in fact, paid, the appellate court, after quoting the definition of the word "certificate," said: "A purported certificate which does not testify to the truth is really not a certificate. A certificate such as is the one made in this case should bind nobody, but should yield to the facts and be disregarded."—Mosley v. Carswell, 152 S.E. 856, 41 Ga.App. 267.

(2) Clerk's certificate as to the filing of certain original document concluding with the statement "as I am informed and believe through such information; but there is no memoranda of the filing in my office nor have I any independent recollection thereof," held not sufficient certificate.—Federal Union Surety Co. v. Certificate into chancery. In English practice, a document containing the opinion of the common-law judges on a question of law submitted to them for their decision by the chancery court.⁷⁸

Certificate of deposit. As the written acknowledgment by a bank or banker of the receipt of a sum of money on deposit subject to particular conditions, see the C.J.S. title Banks and Banking § 311, and considered with reference to its negotiability see the C.J.S. title Bills and Notes § 23.

A "certificate of deposit" has been held to be a chose in action,⁷⁹ and, in a particular connection, to be included by the terms "obligation" and "obligation or other security."⁸⁰

Certificate of holder of attached property. A certificate required by statute, in some states, to be given by a third person who is found in possession of property subject to an attachment in the sheriff's hands, setting forth the amount and character of such property and the nature of defendant's interest in it.⁸¹

Gold certificate. In the United States a certificate issued by the secretary of the treasury, that gold coin or bullion of a certain stated value in dollars has been deposited in the treasury and is payable to the bearer on demand.⁸² It has been held to be properly called a "United States treasury note."⁸³

Trial by certificate. A mode of trial now little in use; it is resorted to in cases where the fact in issue lies out of the cognizance of the court, and the judges, in order to determine the question, are obliged to rely on the solemn averment or information of persons in such a station as affords them the clearest and most competent knowledge of the truth.⁸⁴

I. DEFINITION AND NATURE OF WRIT

§ 1. Definition

Certiorari is a writ issued from a superior court to an inferior court or tribunal commanding the latter to send up the record of a particular case.

Certiorari, except in so far as it has been enlarged and extended by statute, is a writ issued from a superior court and directed to a court or tribunal of inferior jurisdiction, commanding latter to certify and return to former the record in the particular case.¹ It is a common-law² revisory,³

Statutory provision may be made.—Chavarie v. Robie, Me., 194 A. 404.

Constitutional jurisdiction conferred on supreme court to issue "writ of certiorari" means common-law certiorari.—North Bend Stage Line v. Department of Public Works, 16 P.2d 206, 170 Wash. 217.

Development from criminal side Although it seems that the writ of certiorari was on the criminal side in its earliest use, it later became a remedy in civil cases at common law.—Conners v. City of Knoxville, 189 S.W. 870, 136 Tenn. 428.

Out of kings bench or chancery

A writ of "certiorari" at common law was an original writ, issuing out of chancery or the king's bench, to judges or officers of inferior courts, commanding them to return the records of a cause pending before them.—Ashworth v. Hatcher, 128 S.E. 93, 98 W.Va. 323.

remedial,⁴ and prerogative⁵ writ. The writ is also used, in many jurisdictions, to review not only proceedings of inferior courts but also proceedings of inferior officers, boards, and tribunals exercising judicial or quasi-judicial functions.⁶ It has been said to be "one of the most valuable and efficient remedies" derived from the common law.⁷

The term "recordari" is sometimes used where the writ issues to a court not of record.⁸

Bill of certiorari, or certiorari bill, is a bill in equity, prayed for by defendant, having for its object the removal, by a writ of certiorari, of a cause from an inferior court of equity to the court of chancery; and the ground on which such writ is allowed is that, because of the inferior court's limited jurisdiction, or because of its wrongful assumption of jurisdiction, it cannot afford defendant complete justice.⁹

Where only remedy available

In the exercise of its final revisory jurisdiction on all questions of law and equity, the supreme court has issued a writ of certiorari when no other remedy has been specifically provided by statute for the review of alleged errors of law committed in an inferior tribunal.—Fainardi v. Dunn, supra.

§ 2. Nature of Remedy or Proceeding in General

- a. In general
- b. Character of proceeding

a. In General

Certiorari is an extraordinary writ offering a limited form of review, its principal function being to keep inferior tribunals within their jurisdiction.

Certiorari is an extraordinary remedy¹⁰ offering a limited form of review of a cause or proceeding below,¹¹ its purpose being to bring the record of such cause or proceeding up to the court issuing the writ for consideration by it.¹² It is resorted to for supplying defects of justice in cases obviously entitled to redress, and yet unprovided for by the ordinary forms of proceedings.¹³ The principal office of the writ is to control the action of an inferior tribunal and to keep it within its jurisdiction;¹⁴ it is not so much to determine the valid existence of the court or tribunal as it is to determine whether its jurisdiction has been exceeded.¹⁵ Indeed, the writ has been held not to lie to bring in question the legal existence of the court to which it is directed.¹⁶ The common law writ is not a broad or flexible remedy in as much as all that can be done under it is to quash or to refuse to quash the proceedings complained of.¹⁷

The office of a certiorari is to bring up the proceedings of the court below for examination, that they may be affirmed or quashed, and not to enforce any rights growing out of those proceedings,¹⁸ its purpose not being to compel performance.¹⁹

It is not the function of the writ to supply defects in the action of an inferior tribunal²⁰ or to remedy a defect in the law.²¹

The writ will not ordinarily lie for the purpose of restraining excesses in the action of the inferior tribunal,²² although in some jurisdictions, it may be put to such use.²³ Certiorari is not a proper mode of trying title to lands,²⁴ and questions of title to land which arise in the proceedings cannot ordinarily be tried, as is discussed infra § 155.

*It is not a proceeding against the tribunal or an individual composing it; it acts on the cause or proceeding in the lower court, and removes it to the superior court for reinvestigation.*²⁵

Acts on cause or proceeding in lower court

Fla.—Great American Ins. Co. of New York v. Peters, 141 So. 322, 105 Fla. 380.

(1) As Action, Suit, or Special Proceeding

In some jurisdictions certiorari is considered to be an action or suit rather than a special proceeding, while elsewhere the reverse is true.

It has been said that certiorari was not regarded as an action at common law but as a special proceeding,²⁶ and in some of the code states, where proceedings are divided into actions and special proceedings, it is held to be a special proceeding.²⁷ In other jurisdictions, however, certiorari is considered to be an action rather than a special proceeding.²⁸ Moreover, certiorari has been held to be a suit or action within the purview of particular statutes,²⁹ such as a venue statute,³⁰ a statute relating to costs,³¹ and a statute providing for the renewal of suits.³²

(2) As Judicial or Quasi-Judicial

Technically certiorari is a judicial rather than a quasi-judicial proceeding.

A certiorari proceeding is a judicial proceeding in the technical sense, as distinguished from a quasi-judicial one.³³

(3) As Appellate or Original

Certiorari has some of the characteristics of both original and appellate proceedings.

While certiorari has been said to be original in nature,³⁴ it has also been said to be appellate.³⁵

It may be said, indeed, to have characteristics of both. For example, to the extent that it involves the review of the proceedings of an inferior court, certiorari is an appellate proceeding, but to the extent that the subject matter of the proceeding brought before the appellate court will not be re-investigated, tried, or determined on the merits as on appeal or writ of error, it is an original proceeding.³⁶

(4) Writ in Nature of Audita Querela

Where statutes so provide, certiorari will lie instead of audita querela.

In some jurisdictions by express statutory provision the writ of certiorari will lie instead of audita querela.³⁷ The question as to whether this writ will lie for matters arising before or after judgment is considered infra § 31.

§ 3. As Ancillary to Appeal or Writ of Error

Certiorari is sometimes employed as an auxiliary process for the obtaining of further information as to a matter before the court.

At common law the writ of certiorari is used for two purposes: (1) As an appellate proceeding for the reexamination of some action of an inferior tribunal. (2) As an auxiliary process to enable the court to obtain further information with respect to some matter already before it for adjudication.³⁸

b. Habeas Corpus

Habeas corpus reaches the body but not the record, certiorari reaches the record but not the body.

A writ of habeas corpus reaches the body but not the record; it also reaches jurisdictional matters, but it does not reach the record. A writ of certiorari reaches the record but not the body.⁴⁰

The writ of certiorari may be employed in the alternative to habeas corpus, under statutes so providing, to inquire into the cause of the detention of a person held in custody, where the presence of the person detained is not desired in court.⁴¹

Certiorari as ancillary to Habeas Corpus is considered in C.J.S. title Habeas Corpus § 122, also 29 C.J. p 196 note 16, p 197 note 19.

c. Injunction

An injunction restrains or prohibits; certiorari does neither, but rather annuls.

The office of certiorari is in no sense that of a restraining order. It is not the purpose of the writ to restrain or prohibit, but to annul.⁴² It is not the appropriate remedy to prevent anticipated wrong or injury.⁴³

d. Mandamus

Mandamus issues to compel performance of an unperformed ministerial duty; certiorari issues to review a performed judicial act.

The distinction between mandamus and certiorari is clear and well defined;⁴⁴ mandamus issues to compel, certiorari to review, official or judicial action;⁴⁵ thus the former issues to compel an un-performed ministerial duty while the latter reviews a performed judicial duty.⁴⁶ Certiorari also differs from mandamus in that by the latter writ the case is proceeded with in the inferior court, in accordance with the order of the court granting it.⁴⁷

The writ of certiorari performs none of the functions of a writ of mandamus.⁴⁸ It does not take the place of mandamus to compel the making of a record, but takes the record as it finds it, excluding the mere evidence which can, in the nature of things, relate to the merits only.⁴⁹ However, it has been held that an application for mandamus may be continued as one for certiorari where that appears to be the proper remedy.⁵⁰

e. Prohibition

Prohibition is a preventive remedy directed to the court itself to restrain future action; certiorari is a corrective remedy to examine some action of a court directed to the cause and not to the court.

Although similar to prohibition in that it will lie for want or excess of jurisdiction, certiorari is to be distinguished from prohibition by the fact that it is a corrective remedy used for the reexamination of some action of an inferior tribunal, and is directed to the cause or proceeding in the lower court and not to the court itself, while prohibition is a preventive remedy issuing to restrain future action, and is directed to the court itself. Statutory provisions changing the common-law features of prohibition sometimes create further distinctions. So, where an act beyond or in excess of jurisdiction has been done and made of record, the remedy may be by certiorari to quash such record, but if the act is only threatened the remedy is by writ of prohibition.⁵¹ Furthermore, the writ of certiorari can be issued only to a tribunal or person exercising judicial functions, whereas the writ of prohibition can be issued against one exercising either judicial or ministerial functions.⁵²

Prohibition treated as certiorari. Under the practice in force in some jurisdictions of entertaining a petition as an application for the proper relief, where an order complained of in a petition for prohibition has already been made by the court, the petition will be treated as an application for a writ of certiorari.⁵³

§ 5. Converting into Suit in Equity

Certiorari cannot be converted into a suit in equity.

In as much as the writ of certiorari is a common-law one, such a proceeding cannot be converted into a suit in equity, so as to administer a public charity created by a will, when the property, which is the foundation of the charity, is still in the hands of the executor, whose final report is sought to be reviewed by the writ.⁵⁴

Allowance of appeal

Certiorari does not lie to compel a trial judge to grant a suspensive appeal from judgment dissolving restraining order; proper remedy to compel a judge to grant such an appeal being mandamus.—Hudson v. Skannal, 162 So. 1, 182 La. 324.

II. WHEN WRIT LIES

A. IN GENERAL

§ 6. General Statement

General propositions precisely defining when certiorari will lie are practically impossible of formulation because of the nature of the writ and of varying statutory provisions.

It is impossible to lay down any rule which will precisely define when certiorari will lie.⁵⁵ This is sometimes true even as to the law of a particular state, and is especially true when it is attempted to formulate a rule broad enough to cover all jurisdictions. Even where not regulated by statute, the scope of the writ, as shown infra § 9, is to some extent different in particular states, the remedy being more comprehensive in some states than in others. Thus, it should be kept in mind, in connection with the law hereinafter stated, that the decisions of a particular state as to the right to the writ may be of little or no value in other states where the scope of the writ is different. Moreover, while in some states there are no statutes providing in what cases the writ will lie, in many states the scope of the writ is expressly defined by statutes, see infra §§ 7, 8, which themselves differ to a considerable extent.

Matters to be considered before instituting proceedings. In deciding whether the writ will lie, several matters must be taken into consideration: (1) Are there any statutes or rules of court which change the scope of the writ as it existed at common law, see infra §§ 7-9, and, if so, are matters sought to be reviewed such as are reviewable under said statutes or rules of court? (2) In nearly all jurisdictions, is there another adequate remedy, or is the case within an exception so that the writ lies, even if there is another adequate remedy, see infra §§ 37-41? (3) Do the matters sought to be reviewed relate to the jurisdiction, infra § 23, or are they such that they are reviewable under the practice in the particular state, infra §§ 9, 24? (4) In most jurisdictions is the matter sought to be reviewed a judicial or quasi-judicial act, infra §§ 17, 18, as distinguished from a ministerial, executive, or legislative act? (5) Is the matter sought to be reviewed within the discretion of the inferior tribunal or officer, see infra § 30? (6) Is there such a "final" adjudication as permits the granting of the writ, see infra § 20? (7) Are there any facts connected with the matter such as will induce the court, in the exercise of its discretion, to deny the writ, see infra §§ 10-16?

Judgments of justices of the peace. The rules relating to certiorari to review a judgment of a justice of the peace are in many respects different, due in part to statutes solely governing such certiorari proceedings, and are not considered herein, but are discussed at length in C.J.S. title Justices of the Peace §§ 243-266, also 35 C.J. p 859 note 17-p 886 note 14.

Criminal proceedings. The rules governing certiorari in criminal proceedings do not necessarily apply to certiorari in civil proceedings and are treated in C.J.S. title Criminal Law §§ 1629, 1781, also 17 C.J. p 15 note 82-p 18 note 28, p 23 notes 83-93, p 107 notes 37-39, p 166 note 51-p 167 note 76.

§ 7. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions

- a. In general
- b. Extension, limitation, or abolition of writ

a. In General

The power to issue certiorari is sometimes expressly granted by express constitutional or statutory provision; without such provision it may issue as a common-law writ or as a writ the power to issue which is inherent in a superior court.

In as much as the power to issue the writ of certiorari in a proper case is inherent, at least in the higher courts of record,⁵⁶ no statute is necessary to authorize such courts to issue the writ.⁵⁷ In some jurisdictions there is no statute prescribing the function of a writ of certiorari, in which case of course the common law prevails.⁵⁸ In other jurisdictions the writ is controlled entirely by statute,⁵⁹ or may issue as provided by statute or as at common law, where the statute has not abrogated the common-law right.⁶⁰ It is within the legislative province to determine the procedure and practice for review by certiorari,⁶¹ and to designate the 61. Iowa.—Anderson v. Jester, 221 N.W. 354, 206 Iowa 452.

Statute consolidating practice
The statutory procedure supersededcourts out of which and to which it shall issue.⁶² A reasonable statutory limitation as to the time within which certiorari may issue is constitutional.⁶³ Nevertheless, a statute providing that, unless the court refuses an application for certiorari within a certain number of days, the writ shall issue has been held to be unconstitutional as a legislative invasion of the prerogative of the judiciary.⁶⁴

Fixing scope of writ. The legislature may, within constitutional limits,⁶⁵ enlarge⁶⁶ or contract⁶⁷ the scope of the remedy of certiorari and the grounds on which it will lie. Statutes claimed to "enlarge" the use of the writ have been strictly construed.⁶⁸ However, statutes claimed to confer

the right to issue the writ should be construed liberally.⁶⁹ Thus, a provision conferring "appellate jurisdiction in all cases, both in law and equity," has been held to authorize the issue of the writ where no other mode of review is specified.⁷⁰

Retroactive effect. Statutory regulations are ordinarily not retroactive.⁷¹

"Special" statutory writs. In investigating the statutory provisions applicable to the writ, it is necessary to remember that in addition to general statutory provisions applicable to certiorari there are often found provisions for a special statutory writ which are more or less different from the general statutes, and which govern certiorari to review certain proceedings;⁷² reference should be made to ing certiorari to review mandamus, and prohibition consolidates practice relating to such modes of relief, somewhat broadening meaning of terms previously used, scope of relief granted, and jurisdiction of special term.—Penn-York Natural Gas Corporation v. Maltbie, 299 N.Y.S. 1004, 164 Misc. 569.

62. Statute inapplicable

In answer to a contention that the supreme court has no jurisdiction to grant certiorari in a case after the power of such court to entertain a petition for the writ had been taken away by statute, it has been held to be sufficient to state that the Act cited has no application to the case and that, under a rule of the court, writs of certiorari, in cases pending before effective date of Civ.Pract. Act 1933, are governed by former Practice Act, although granted after such date.—People ex rel. Nelson v. Sheridan Trust & Savings Bank, 193 N.E. 186, 353 Ill. 290, reversing 272 Ill.App. 27, certiorari denied Elie Sheetz Candies Co. v. O'Connell, 55 S.Ct. 654, 295 U.S. 740, 79 L.Ed. 1687.

64. Ga.—Holliman v. State, 165 S.E. 11, 175 Ga. 232, denying certiorari 155 S.E. 906, 42 Ga.App. 322.

65. Constitutionality of statute

(1) The proviso of Pract. Act § 121, making a judgment of an appellate court final unless such court shall grant a certificate of importance and an appeal to the supreme court or the supreme court shall require, by certiorari or otherwise, the case to be certified to it, is not unconstitutional.—McGinnis v. McGinnis, 124 N.E. 562, 289 Ill. 608, dismissing error 211 Ill.App. 240.

(2) A statute, providing that "before the writ of certiorari shall lie to any verdict, judgment, order, or ruling of a certain municipal court, a motion for a new trial must be made before the judge trying the case, and his judgment thereon must be reviewed by the appellate division of such court in the manner provided by the statute, and that the writ shall lie only to the final judgment of the appellate division of such court," has been held not to be unconstitutional as denying the constitutional privilege of the writ of certiorari, since its effect is merely to provide that the writ shall be available only after the losing party has exhausted his remedy in the municipal court.—Orr v. Southern Acceptance Co., 134 S.E. 80, 162 Ga. 400.

Scope not extended

(1) A statutory provision that "a writ of certiorari shall be granted by the Supreme and District Courts, when inferior courts, officers, boards or tribunals have exceeded their jurisdiction and there is no appeal, nor, in the judgment of the court, any other plain, speedy and adequate remedy" is not extended by an amendment adding "and also when in the judgment of the court it is deemed necessary to prevent a miscarriage of justice."—Sell v. Davis, 237 N.W. 307, 308, 61 N.D. 130—Livingston v. Peterson, 228 N.W. 816, 59 N.D. 104.

(2) Statute providing for review of actions of boards and commissions by the courts did not enlarge scope of writ, although permitting additional evidence.—Anderson v. City of Memphis, 72 S.W.2d 1059, 167 Tenn. 648.

Not substituted for appeal or writ of error

A statute providing that circuit courts shall have power to issue writs of certiorari to any officer or board of officers "to correct any erroneous or void proceedings and to hear and determine the same" does not so enlarge the use of the writ as to make it answer the ends of an appeal or a writ of error for the correction of mere errors in judicial proceedings.—St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Barnes, supra.

Change in procedure

A change in the Practice Act relating to procedure in proceedings on certiorari does not impair proceedings already had at the time that the change took place; but thereafter the procedure must be adapted to conform to the new provision.—Demarse v. Bruckman, 293 N.Y.S. 736, 164 Misc. 331.

b. Extension, Limitation, or Abolition of Writ

(1) Where Writ Is Constitutional Remedy

(2) Where Writ Is Not Constitutional Remedy

(1) Where Writ Is Constitutional Remedy

Where protected by the constitution, certiorari cannot be limited or abolished.

Where the remedy of certiorari is created or guaranteed by constitutional provision, it cannot be limited or taken away⁷³ by statute or by a municipal charter provision.⁷⁴ A statute dispensing with the necessity of granting the writ to designated tribunals is, however, not violative of constitutional provisions permitting the allowance of the writ,⁷⁵ and the legislature may provide an exclusive mode of review in a particular class of cases, notwithstanding a constitutional provision authorizing certiorari generally.⁷⁶

(2) When Writ Is Not Constitutional Remedy

Although the writ, when it is not provided for by constitutional provision, may be denied or abrogated by statute, it seems that it may still issue in special cases.

Where there is no constitutional barrier, the issuance of the writ may be, and has been, limited, denied, or abrogated by statute in some jurisdictions.⁷⁷ Such a statute, however, is not retroactive.⁷⁸ It has been also held that, despite the abolition of the writ, the courts still possess the same power to compel complete and perfect transcripts of the proceedings containing the judgment or final order sought to be reversed to be furnished as they had when writs of error and certiorari were in force.⁷⁹ The intent to abrogate the right must clearly appear from the legislative enactment and cannot be inferred from language of doubtful import.⁸⁰ Thus, a statutory provision that decisions of courts or officers shall be final does not, it is generally held, preclude the writ,⁸¹ although there is authority to the contrary.⁸²

Effect of abrogation. Although the right is abrogated by statute, the writ may still issue, with due precaution, in special cases of manifest want of jurisdiction, or where the procedure is manifestly in excess of, or under mere color of, jurisdiction, which could not have been intended to be protected,⁸³ even though the decision or judgment of the inferior court or tribunal is final and conclusive and no appeal lies.⁸⁴ So, if the inferior tribunal was without jurisdiction but proceeded under color of a statute the writ may issue, although the statute inhibits the removal of proceedings had under it;⁸⁵ but it is otherwise where the proceedings are under the statute.⁸⁶

§ 8. — Statutory Writ of Review

The writ of review provided by statute in some jurisdictions is, as a rule, substantially the same as the writ of certiorari.

In several jurisdictions, particularly those of far western and northwestern United States, the statutes provide for a writ called a "writ of review."⁸⁷

Election contest

It has been held that a statutory provision that the decisions of a city council in a contested election case shall be final and conclusive does not deprive a common-law court of the right to review such action by certiorari; but the statute merely means that the action and decision of the council shall not be reviewable, so far as the merits are concerned.—Rash v. Allen, 76 A. 370, 24 Del. 444.

87. Cal.—Camm v. Justice's Court

This writ, although unknown as such to the common-law,⁸⁸ is substantially the common-law remedy by certiorari,⁸⁹ with some modifications as to when the writ will issue and what relief may be granted, which, however, do not materially enlarge the scope of the writ or substantially alter its character or purpose.⁹⁰ Hereafter, in this discussion the writ of review will be referred to as certiorari unless there is reason to identify it particularly.

Grounds. The statutes creating and defining writs of review are, with a few exceptions, almost identical in their phraseology, and before the writs will issue it is necessary, under their express provisions, to show: (1) That the court, or board, or tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction while in the exercise of judicial functions. (2) That there is no remedy by appeal. (3) That there is no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy.⁹¹ There is an excess of jurisdiction, it seems, where the court or tribunal has not "regularly pursued . . . [the] authority" of such court or tribunal.⁹²

In Oregon the writ is concurrent with the right of appeal, and is allowed in all cases where the inferior court, officer, or tribunal in the exercise of judicial functions appears to have exercised such functions erroneously, that is, illegally and contrary to the course of procedure applicable to it, or when it has exceeded its jurisdiction to the injury of some substantial right of plaintiff.⁹³ This, however, does not authorize the writ to be used to correct mere errors in the exercise of rightful jurisdiction, or to inquire whether the rulings of the inferior tribunal on the law and the evidence, and in the application of the law to the facts, are correct.⁹⁴ Questions of fact are not reviewable nor is the evidence,⁹⁵ and original relief cannot be secured.⁹⁶

In Washington the statute authorizes the writ in case of excess of jurisdiction or illegal acts, or to correct any erroneous or void proceeding, or to review a proceeding not according to the course of the common law, provided in all such cases that there is no appeal nor any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law.⁹⁷

§ 9. Right to and Grounds for Writ in Particular Jurisdictions

The jurisdictions vary materially as to the right to, and the grounds for, a writ of certiorari; in some a review of all errors of law is permitted, while in others only want or excess of jurisdiction or illegality or irregularity of procedure will be considered.

For convenience in classification, the jurisdictions in the United States, in so far as the law therein as to the scope of certiorari is concerned, may be roughly grouped as follows: (1) States where all errors of law, in addition to jurisdictional questions, may be reviewed. (2) States where want or excess of jurisdiction is the only ground. (3) States where the writ is confined to jurisdictional questions and "illegality" or irregularity of procedure. The grounds for the writ in certain western states, where the writ is called a

Determination of regularity

(1) Writ of review is not writ of error and cannot take place of appeal, but is simply what the code states it to be; namely, a review of proceedings in inferior tribunal to determine whether authority of such tribunal has been regularly pursued.—Holmes v. Justice's Court of Oakland Tp., Cal.App., 65 P.2d 820.

(2) The review cannot be extended further than to determine whether the inferior tribunal, board, or officer has regularly pursued its authority under a statute, Comp.L. 1917 § 7383, expressly so providing.—Hillyard v. District Court of Cache County, 249 P. 806, 68 Utah 220.

"writ of review," are stated in the preceding section. In order better to understand what is said herein in connection with the statements as to when the writ lies, and to be able to distinguish and weigh the decisions in states other than the one in which the proceeding is to be brought, it is deemed advisable to state at the outset, as briefly as possible, without any attempt to collect all the decisions in the respective states, the particular rule, statutory or otherwise, which governs the right to the writ in several of the states where the scope thereof is more or less clearly defined.

In Alabama the statute does not authorize the writ of certiorari in any case not provided for by the common law.⁹⁸ Thus, the supervisory power of a superior court over an inferior legal tribunal by means of a common-law writ of certiorari extends only to questions affecting the jurisdiction of the subordinate tribunal and the legality of its proceedings,⁹⁹ and the writ will not be issued to correct defects correctable by appeal.¹ The term "statutory certiorari," as used in this jurisdiction, refers to removal of causes to the superior court for trial de novo.²

In Arkansas the well settled practice, in so far as the right of a circuit court to issue a writ of certiorari is concerned, is to limit its issuance to cases: (1) Where the tribunal to which it issues has exceeded its jurisdiction. (2) Where the party applying for it had the right of appeal but lost it through no fault of his own. (3) In cases where it has supervising control over a jurisdiction which has proceeded illegally and no other mode has been provided for directly reviewing its proceedings.³

In Colorado the statute authorizes the writ, not only where the court or tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction, but also where it has "greatly abused" its discretion.⁴ It is held, however, that the principles governing the writ are not affected by the statutory regulation thereof.⁵ The writ may be granted by the supreme court where its decisions have not been followed by the court of appeals, see infra § 22 a.

In Connecticut the practice by certiorari has apparently fallen entirely into disuse.⁶

In Delaware it has been held that the writ of certiorari is in the nature of a writ of error.⁷

In the District of Columbia the writ lies, not only to review jurisdictional errors, but also where the inferior court or a special tribunal has deprived the party of a judicial writ or has imposed a burden on his property without due process of law.⁸

In Florida the writ is not a substitute for a writ of error or an appeal, but lies to determine whether the inferior tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction, "or has not proceeded according to the essential requirements of the law, in cases where no direct appellate proceedings are provided by law."⁹ The writ is limited to an inquiry as to whether the proceedings legally applicable to the case were followed, and whether or not the rulings of the court below were correct will not be considered.¹⁰

In Georgia the remedy is much more extensive in its application than in most of the states. It is a constitutional right,¹¹ always¹² available, to review any final judgment of an inferior court;¹³ nevertheless, an issue of gravity and importance must be raised rather than mere questions of practice and evidence.¹⁴

In Illinois certiorari lies only where the inferior court or tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction, or where it has not proceeded according to law.¹⁵ The second ground for the writ means that the court has not followed the form of proceedings legally applicable in such cases, and does not authorize a review merely on the ground that the rulings of the inferior court were erroneous.¹⁶

In Iowa there are two statutory grounds for the writ: (1) Excess of jurisdiction. (2) Otherwise acting "illegally." The latter ground does not, however, extend to mere errors of law.¹⁷

In Louisiana certiorari is an appropriate remedy to inquire into the jurisdiction of inferior courts and into the regularity of their proceedings.¹⁸ Nevertheless, the supreme court will ordinarily grant the writ only in special or extreme cases, whose peculiar circumstances as to the facts or law governing the same justify, in the opinion of the court, a resort to it.¹⁹ Such a case will arise where

Practical deprivation of right of appeal

Where the setting of a case for summary trial because of a reconventional demand would compel the taking of an appeal within twenty-four hours instead of ten days, error therein will be considered on application for a writ.—Cepro v. Matulich, 95 So. 226, 152 La. 1072.

If order of judicial sequestration of oil and gas properties was unjustified, company aggrieved by order is entitled to relief.—Dickinson v. Texana Oil & Refining Co., 80 So. 669, 144 La. 489.

Instruction to court of appeal on law question propounded, while controlling on that court, does not preclude supreme court from subsequently reviewing case by writ of an intermediate appellate court has refused to follow well established rules laid down by the supreme court, see infra § 22 a, and the supreme court will correct defects in the judgment of the court of appeals where they are patent on the face of the record.²⁰

In Maine and Massachusetts, the usual function of the writ is to enable a party without a remedy by appeal, exception, or other mode of correcting errors of law to bring the true record of an inferior tribunal whose proceedings are judicial or quasi-judicial in nature, properly extended, so as to show the principles of the decision, before a superior court for examination as to material mistakes of law apparent on such record, and only errors of law are reviewable thereon.²¹ The error of law to be corrected should be so substantial in nature as to make it manifest that justice requires the writ to issue to prevent a material wrong.²²

In Maryland "the office of the writ is twofold: First, to test the jurisdiction of the inferior tribunal; secondly, to require it to adopt a legal and regular course of procedure in the conduct of the judicial proceeding in which it may be engaged, i. e., to follow the form of procedure legally applicable to the case. In either case, the general rule is that the court from which the certiorari issues, in reviewing the proceedings of the inferior tribunal does not try the merits of the case, unless authorized by statute to do so, but confines itself to determining whether the inferior tribunal has jurisdiction, or has adopted and followed the regular or legal procedure."²³

In Michigan there is more or less conflict in the decisions, and it is difficult to deduce a general rule. The scope of the writ, in earlier years, seems to have been broader than at present. It is now expressly provided by statute that rulings on the issues raised on demurrer, plea to the jurisdiction, or other dilatory plea, where adverse to the moving party, may be reviewed by the writ;²⁴ but the other grounds for the writ are not defined by statute.

In Minnesota the scope of the writ seems to be broader than in many other states, and it seems that it is a substitute for a writ of error and that questions other than jurisdictional ones may be reviewed.²⁵

In Mississippi, by statute, certiorari "lies to review the judgments of all tribunals inferior to the circuit court, whether an appeal be provided by law from the judgment sought to be reviewed or not";²⁶ and a state railroad commission is an inferior tribunal, within that statute.²⁷ Furthermore, it is held that "a mistaken finding of fact induced by an error of law apparent upon the record, the finding of a fact contrary to law, or the making of an order beyond the cognizance and power of the commission, can and will be corrected by the certiorari and review, as on appeal.—Pipes v. Gallman, 140 So. 40, 174 La. 257, annulling 135 So. 690, 18 La. App. 434, answers conformed to 136 So. 302, 173 La. 158.

Nature of writ

"Certiorari" is a writ issued by superior court to inferior one, commanding it to certify up its records of some proceeding not according to course of common law, that it may be determined whether there is any error in record for which it should be quashed.—Jellerson v. Board of Police of City of Biddeford, 187 A. 713, 134 Me. 443.

Fact questions

Writ does not lie to correct questions of fact, or to examine sufficiency of evidence to support findings of fact, unless objection was taken to evidence for incompetency, so as to raise legal question.—Murphy v. Justices of Municipal Court of Dorchester Dist. of City of Boston, 116 N.E. 969, 228 Mass. 12.

Overruling of motion to dismiss

Under Judicature Act c 14 § 4, abolishing demurrers, pleas in abatement, and pleas to the jurisdiction, certiorari will not lie to review an order overruling a motion to dismiss, on account of matters set up in the notice attached to the general issue, where the matters so set up are not matters which might have been raised by demurrer, plea in abatement, or plea to the jurisdiction under the former practice.—Thomas Canning Co. v. Cannors' Exch. Subscribers at Warner Inter-Insurance Bureau, 167 N.W. 882, 202 Mich. 64.

Refusal to vacate judgment

Where reviewable at all, a denial of a motion to vacate a judgment docketed in the circuit court on a transcript from the justice court is reviewable by certiorari.—De Guzman v. Shepherd, 196 N.W. 523, 225 Mich. 606—Townsend v. Tudor, 1 N. W. 1050, 41 Mich. 263.

Nature of writ of error

superior courts" on certiorari.²⁸ It is also held in that state that evidence may be heard by the circuit court in order to make manifest error of law committed by the inferior tribunal.²⁹

In Missouri the office of certiorari is said to be the same as at common law.³⁰ The writ may be resorted to where the court to which it is directed has no jurisdiction or acts in excess or abuse of its jurisdiction or where there is no remedy by appeal or writ of error.³¹

In New Jersey the application of the writ has been extended further than in almost any other state. The writ is used in that state, at least to some extent, both as a statutory substitute for a writ of error and as a common-law writ.³² It is regulated by several statutes, differing according to the court or tribunal involved and the nature of the proceeding. It is a proper method of redress for an individual whose rights are invaded by the action of persons clothed with authority and who exercise that authority illegally.³³ In this respect it is commonly used to review the acts of municipal³⁴ or state³⁵ tribunals, bodies, or officers, and it is often used to review municipal ordinances, in respect of which its scope is much wider than in other states.³⁶ The writ does not lie, however, to a circuit court in the exercise of its judicial functions in the course of the common law,³⁷ even though the court acts without jurisdictional author-

As writ of error

Office of writ of certiorari, in suit to recover damages for wrongful declaring of chattel mortgage in default and for attempting to foreclose, to review order of court of common pleas setting aside verdict as excessive, is in nature of that of writ of error, and its allowance is governed by similar principles.—Calipoulos v. Chagaris, 126 A. 471, 2 N.J.Misc. 998.

Supervisory purpose

Certiorari is prerogative writ by which supreme court exercises jurisdiction to supervise proceedings of inferior tribunals and governmental establishments.—Mellor v. Kaighn, 99 A. 207, 89 N.J.Law 543, affirming, Sup., 96 A. 1015.

Exclusive remedy

Certiorari is not only an adequate, but is the exclusive, remedy for a judicial review of proceedings of a municipal body, in the absence of special equities or acts ultra vires.—Williams v. Board of Com'rs of Borough of Audubon, 126 A. 664, 96 N.J.Eq. 459.

Board of adjustment

(1) Test of validity of order or resolution of board of adjustment should be by certiorari and not by bill for injunction.—Ostrowsky v. City of Newark, 139 A. 911, 102 N.J.Eq. 169.

(2) Certiorari will lie to review refusal of board of adjustment to recommend to governing body that proposed structure be allowed in an area restricted by a borough zoning ordinance.—Crescent Hill v. Borough of Allendale, 192 A. 514, 118 N.J.Law 302.

Consent given to railroad line

Where a railroad charter gives the right to build a branch line with municipal consent, the city's consent is not ultra vires because the structure will be a public nuisance, and a landowner suffering special damage will be entitled to review the consent by certiorari, because the structure, being authorized by statute, will not be a nuisance subject to indictment or a civil suit for damages, and otherwise he would have no remedy.—Seaman v. City of Perth Amboy, 116 A. 22, 97 N.J.Law 76, affirmed 119 A. 278, 98 N.J.Law 174.

No insistence on personal right

Certiorari proceeding to review municipal action is not personal action, in which prosecutor may on snarp grounds insist on personal right.—Town of Hammonton v. Elvins, 127 A. 241, 101 N.J.Law 38—Simmons v. Borough of Wenonah, 143 A. 73, 6 N.J.Misc. 902—Jersey Central Power & Light Co. v. Borough of Spring Lake, 140 A. 677, 6 N.J.Misc. 253.

Court has general jurisdiction

The writ does not lie to review

ity or enlarges or extends its judicial powers.³⁸ The judgment of the court of common pleas on appeal from small cause courts is reviewable only by certiorari, and not by writ of error.³⁹

In New York the law governing certiorari to review proceedings against a body or officer exercising judicial, quasi-judicial, administrative, or corporate functions involving the exercise of judgment or discretion has been altered by statute, and writs of certiorari to review, mandamus, and prohibition have been expressly abolished.⁴⁰ The substituted remedy is not available to review determinations made by a court of record or determinations not finally determining the rights of the parties, nor is it available in cases where an adequate review by appeal is available. It is held that the provision that the question involving the merits to be determined on the hearing is whether, in making the determination, any rule of law affecting the rights of the parties thereto has been violated to the prejudice of petitioner, is the successor to the former provisions for certiorari.⁴¹

In North Dakota, under express provisions of the statute, the writ may be granted by the supreme and district courts when inferior courts, officers, boards, or tribunals have exceeded their jurisdiction and there is no appeal, nor, in the judgment of the court, any other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, and also when in the judgment of the court it is deemed necessary to prevent a miscarriage of justice.⁴² The statute has been construed to extend the function of the writ to other than judicial or quasi-judicial proceedings, and to extend it to every case where the inferior courts, officers, boards, or tribunals have exceeded their jurisdiction.⁴³

In Pennsylvania the statute provides that all appellate proceedings in the supreme court, theretofore taken by writ of error, appeal, or certiorari, shall thereafter be taken in a proceeding to be proceedings in common-law actions in the circuit court, for the reason that such court is one of record having general jurisdiction over common-law actions.—Taylor Provision Co. v. Adams Express Co., 65 A. 508, 72 N.J.Law 220.

Transfer order

Order of circuit court authorizing transfer of case from district to circuit court because counterclaim exceeded district court's jurisdiction, is not properly reviewable by certiorari.—Eder v. Hudson County Circuit Court, 140 A. 883, 104 N.J.Law 260.

40. Certiorari under prior statutes

(1) Formerly, the code expressly provided that the writ can be granted only: First, where the right to the writ is expressly conferred, or the issue thereof is expressly authorized, by statute; or second, where the writ may be issued at common law and the right thereto has not been expressly taken away by statute; and it is also provided that the writ cannot be issued to review a determination made "in a civil action or special proceeding, by a court of record, or a judge of a court of record."—People ex rel. Dawley v. Wilson, 133 N.E. 45, 232 N.Y. 12, reversing 189 N.Y.S. 585, 198 App.Div. 158, reargument denied 134 N.E. 563, 232 N.Y. 540—Fulton County v. Board of Hudson River Regulating Dist., 248 N.Y.S. 8, 231 App. Div. 408—11 C.J. p 94 note 97.

(2) Where statute prescribed manner in which commissioner of public education should exercise powers conferred on him and perform duties imposed on him under statute relating to World War scholarship, action of commissioner of education in the exercise of such functions was properly reviewable by certiorari.—People ex rel. Anthony v. Graves, 279 N.Y.S. 847, 244 App.Div. 860.

(3) It was held that although Education Law §§ 890, 304, substantially reenacting L.1909 c 21 § 360, conferring on the commission of education quasi-judicial functions to determine controversies arising at school meetings, makes the decision of the commissioner on matters of school administration and policy final, in all matters outside its general policy and administration, where the education system interferes with the rights of the people, the courts have full jurisdiction, and hence the adoption of a budget and authorization of a tax levy at an annual school district meeting, without complying with statute as to voting thereon, is subject to review by certiorari.—Miller v. Gould, 200 N.Y.S. 884, 121 Misc. 270.

(4) Where claim for services performed for board of education of a city has been presented to the board and has been disallowed on ground that it was not a legal claim, without the board passing on the merits of the claim, certiorari is a proper remedy to compel the board to pass on the claim on its merits.—People ex rel. Kiehm v. Board of Education of City of Utica, 190 N.Y.S. 798, 198 App.Div. 476.

(5) Before 1868 the tendency of the courts in New York, in certiorari cases, was to refuse to examine into the evidence or to determine any question beyond that of jurisdiction.—Matter of Lauterjung, 48 N.Y.Super. 308.

(6) In the year 1868 the court of appeals extended the scope of the writ.—Peo. v. Metropolitan Bd. of Police, 39 N.Y. 506.

(7) It seems that later decisions adopted this modification, and that the rule then was that on a common-law certiorari it is the duty of the court to examine the evidence and to determine whether there was any competent proof of the facts necessary to authorize the adjudication, and whether, in making it, any rule of law affecting the rights of the parties had been violated.—Peo. v. Board of Police Comrs., 6 Hun 229, reversed on other grounds 67 N.Y. 475.

41. N.Y.—Bonacker v. Chuckrow, 2 N.Y.S.2d 265, 166 Misc. 171.

Failure to send notice

The clerk of county board of supervisors, by failing to send one supervisor notice of meeting of board, although other members received notice, did not fail to perform a duty specifically enjoined on him by law or violate any rule of law affecting rights of parties within statute setting forth matters which could be determined in a proceeding against a body or officer.—Bonacker v. Chuckrow, supra.

42. N.D.—State ex rel Olson v. Wellford, 260 S.W. 593—Molander v. Swenson, 210 N.W. 9.

called an appeal; but such statute does not extend the right of review or change the extent in cases already provided for, and hence certiorari lies under such statute only in those cases where it would lie before the statute.⁴⁴

In Puerto Rico the writ may be issued where there is a want of jurisdiction or where the procedure established by law has not been followed.⁴⁵

In Rhode Island, by statute, the supreme court has jurisdiction to issue certiorari to inferior courts "to correct and prevent errors and abuses therein when no other remedy is expressly provided."⁴⁶

In Tennessee, by statutory provision, the writ may be granted whenever authorized by law, and also in all cases where an inferior tribunal, board, or officer exercising a judicial function has exceeded the jurisdiction conferred or is acting illegally when, in the judgment of the court, there is no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy. It will lie on suggestion of diminution, where no appeal is given, as a substitute for appeal, instead of audita querela, and instead of writ of error.⁴⁷ This provision is not intended to work a change in the common-law function of certiorari as a supervisory writ.⁴⁸ The common-law writ may not be had to correct technical or formal errors not affecting the jurisdiction or power of the inferior tribunal or for the correction of defects not amounting to fundamental illegality,⁴⁹ but is available to review the proceedings of inferior tribunals to determine whether there has been a failure to proceed according to the essential requirements of the law.⁵⁰

Litigant cannot be deprived of right of review by appeal in nature of certiorari so far as relates to question of jurisdiction.—Appeal of Walker, 144 A. 288, 294 Pa. 385.

Review by supreme court

(1) The scope of review by the supreme court on certiorari is differentiated, depending on the statutes involved, review being limited to jurisdiction where the statute does not permit an appeal, or where it states that the decision of the court below is final, and review in the broad sense is proper when the statute is silent on the question of appeal.—In re Incorporation of Elkland Leather Workers' Ass'n, Pa., 198 A. 13.

(2) Where proceedings in lower court, on appeal from action of board of adjustment in refusing to issue permit for garages, were held pursuant to statute which was silent as to right of appeal to higher court, supreme court on appeal from lower court was required to examine record in the broadest sense allowed by certiorari, that is, to review, solely with view of determining whether there was evidence to justify action taken by court below, and of correcting errors of law appearing therein.—Fleming v. Board of Adjustment of Borough of Prospect Park, 178 A. 813, 318 Pa. 582.

Arrest proceedings in civil cases

(1) The supreme court has jurisdiction to review on certiorari the proceedings of judges of the court of common pleas under a warrant for the arrest of defendant or judgment debtor at the instance of plaintiff, on whose complaint the warrant was issued.—Morch v. Raubitschek, 28 A. 369, 159 Pa. 559.

Certiorari and supersedeas will lie to supersede an illegal and unauthorized entry, action, or order of the trial court.—Johnson City v. Unaka Milling Co., 7 Tenn.Civ.App. 490.

48. Tenn.—Connors v. City of Knoxville, 189 S.W. 870, 136 Tenn. 428.

Statutory and common-law writs distinguished

The common-law writ of certiorari will lie only when a body acts beyond its jurisdiction or illegally within its jurisdiction and not to correct erroneous acts, while statutory certiorari is a writ given in lieu of an appeal and brings the case up for trial de novo.—Binford v. Carline, 9 Tenn.App. 364.

Distinction not destroyed

Statutes providing for review of actions of boards and commissions by courts did not destroy distinction between writ of certiorari as employed under common law for review of legality of action of board or inferior tribunal as within its jurisdiction, and writ of certiorari authorized by statute to be employed in lieu of appeal for review and correction of errors of fact and law committed by inferior tribunal.—Anderson v. City of Memphis, 72 S.W. 2d 1059, 167 Tenn. 648.

Scope not curtailed

Tennessee legislative and judicial history manifest a strong purpose not to curtail the right to review by certiorari the exercise of judicial power by inferior or quasi-judicial tribunals.—Rhea County v. White, 43 S.W.2d 375, 163 Tenn. 388.

"From the earliest period of our judicial history, the certiorari has had given to it a much more extended application than in England; and it has been used for purposes wholly unknown to the common law. It has been adopted, with us, as the almost universal method by which the circuit courts of general jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, exercise control over all inferior jurisdictions, however constituted, and whatever their course of proceeding; as well where they have attempted to exercise a jurisdiction not conferred, as where there has been an irregular, or erroneous exercise of jurisdiction, and in criminal proceedings as well as in civil."—Nashville v. Pearl, 11 Humphr., Tenn., 249, 251—11 C.J. p 94 note 5.

The supreme court has the power, by certiorari, to revise the action of the court of civil appeals in construing its own rules.⁵¹

In Vermont the office of the writ of certiorari is to provide for a review of the judicial action of inferior courts, special tribunals, public officers, and bodies exercising judicial functions in those instances where no other means of review is provided; it is intended mainly to answer the objects and ends which are reached by writs of error, in those cases where that writ lies, that is, to revise the proceedings of inferior tribunals in matters of law.⁵²

In West Virginia it has been held that, although the general rule is that inquiry will be made into only such errors and defects as go to the jurisdiction of the court below, and that for all other errors or irregularities the party must resort to his remedy by appeal or writ of error, yet if the inferior tribunal proceeds in a summary manner and not according to the course of the common law, and there is no remedy by appeal or writ of error, the court will consider other than jurisdictional questions.⁵³

In Wisconsin a distinction has been drawn between cases where a review is sought of the proceedings of a judicial tribunal and where the tribunal is quasi-judicial. It is held that, in ordinary cases, where the writ goes to inferior courts or tribunals, the record can be inspected only to ascertain whether such court acted within its jurisdiction; but with respect to an officer having only quasi-judicial power, who acts in proceedings of a summary character, out of the course of the common law, the proceedings will be reviewed also to ascertain whether such person, having jurisdiction, has kept within it and has acted strictly according to the law; but the court cannot review mere questions of fact, where there is any contention as to the proof, and it is confined to errors of law as distinguished from errors of judgment.⁵⁴ Later decisions, however, seem to have disregarded this rule, and confine the scope of the writ to jurisdictional questions.⁵⁵

§ 10. Discretion as to Grant of Writ

Ordinarily certiorari issues in the discretion of the court authorized to issue it.

Except where made so by constitutional provision or by statute,⁵⁶ certiorari is not a writ of right, but issues only on special cause shown to the court to which application is made, and the court is vested with judicial discretion to grant or refuse the writ as justice may seem to require,⁵⁷ except, in those jurisdictions where in addition to

Unconstitutional statute

So-called "writ of review," not the same as certiorari or writ of review in the nature of certiorari, attempted to be given any aggrieved party as of right to carry before supreme court orders of department of public works, is in reality an appeal or writ of error, since the statute, declared unconstitutional, makes the issuance of the writ and the review thereunder a matter of right.—North Bend Stage Line v. Department of Public Works, 16 P.2d 206, 170 Wash. 217—11 C.J. p 128 note 2 [a].

As regards private suitors

Certiorari is not writ of right, as regards private suitors, and issuance thereof is within sound judicial discretion.—State ex rel. Duraflor Products Co. v. Percy, 29 S.W.2d 83, 325 Mo. 335—State ex rel. Plummer v. Gardner, 234 S.W. 53, 290 Mo. 143.

Continuance of writ discretionary Certiorari is not writ of right, and may be continued within discretion of court.—State ex rel. McFarland v. Terte, 8 S.W.2d 16, 320 Mo. 465.

Largely discretionary

(1) Issuance of writ of certiorari is largely matter of discretion.—Chase v. Billings, Vt., 170 A. 903.

(2) It is perhaps more discretionary than either prohibition or mandamus.—State v. Kay, 4 P.2d 498, 164 Wash. 685.

Neither side may claim right

Petitioner cannot claim as a matter of right that the writ issue, nor can his opponent claim as a matter of right that the writ shall not issue.—Oxley v. Hammock, 50 S.W.2d 608, 185 Ark. 939.

Review of appellate court judgment

A writ of certiorari from the supreme court to review a judgment of the court of appeals and prevent contrariety of opinions is purely a discretionary writ.—State ex rel. Berkshire v. Ellison, 230 S.W. 970, 287 Mo. 654.

Writ of review

(1) Writ of review is not writ of absolute right.—Crow v. Board of Suprs of Stanislaus County, App., 27 P.2d 655, hearing denied 28 P.2d 906, 135 Cal.App. 451.

(2) Jurisdiction of supreme court to issue "writ of review," is discretionary.—North Bend Stage Line v. Department of Public Works, 16 P. 2d 206, 170 Wash. 217.

(3) Writ of review is not an inalienable right, but merely a privilege which can be exercised only in cases clearly provided.—State v. Kozzer, 247 P. 806, 118 Or. 556.

writ will be granted only where necessary to prevent substantial wrong,⁶¹ or to do substantial justice,⁶² especially where the matters in controversy are of a public nature.⁶³ A stipulation between the parties cannot deprive the court of its discretion.⁶⁴

§ 11. — Nature of Discretion

The discretion is a sound judicial discretion founded on correct legal principles and its clear abuse is generally reviewable.

The discretion vested in a court to issue or deny certiorari, is not an arbitrary one, governed by the whim or caprice of the tribunal, but it is a sound, judicial discretion, dependent on the settled legal principles applicable to the case, and an abuse thereof is generally reviewable;⁶⁵ but such discretion will be interfered with only where a clear case of abuse thereof is shown.⁶⁶ It is important that the writ be guarded from abuse and from encroachment on the regular procedure for review to the confusion of the practice, the practitioners, and the courts.⁶⁷

Cause must be shown. The writ of certiorari, being discretionary, will be allowed or granted only when the application shows some special ground or cause for its issuance.⁶⁸ Conversely, under the rule

11 C.J. p 129 note 6.

Question of practice

To justify the grant of a writ of certiorari the petition must raise an issue of law of gravity and importance rather than a mere question of practice and evidence.—Briesenick v. Dimond, 142 S.E. 118, 165 Ga. 780, dismissing certiorari 134 S.E. 350, 35 Ga.App. 668.

N.C.—King v. Taylor, 124 S.E. 751, 188 N.C. 450.

Where tribunal has jurisdiction

Where tribunal whose records are attacked has jurisdiction in the premises, writ of certiorari is not granted as of right, but at sound discretion of court, when it appears that injustice will be done.—Rogers v. Brown, 181 A. 667, 134 Me. 88.

11 C.J. p 129 note 8.

According to judgment and conscience

Discretion of court on petition for writ of certiorari requires court to act according to dictates of its judgment and conscience, and it involves fair consideration of all peculiar features of particular question involved.—Axley v. Hammock, 50 S.W. 2d 608, 185 Ark. 939.

Agreeable to law and justice

The discretion is to be exercised as the justice of the particular case may suggest and as agreeable to the law pertaining thereto.—Byars v. Town of Boaz, 155 So. 383, 229 Ala. 22.

66. Ill.—Butler v. Harrison, 124 Ill. App. 367.

67. Wash.—State v. Kay, 4 P.2d 498, 164 Wash. 685.

Certiorari by single taxpayer

The discretion to grant the writ of certiorari should be warily exercised when brought by a single taxpayer, and its effect would be to nullify the valuation of property for taxation in this entire city, especially where the taxpayer had other remedies which would prevent a denial of justice, if the writ were refused.—State ex rel. Gardner v. Hall, 221 S.W. 708, 282 Mo. 425.

For review of court of appeals

In view of the origin and purpose of constitutional amendment of 1916, Const. art 6 § 2 par 5, defining jurisdiction of court of appeals and of supreme court, the supreme court's power to review decisions of court of appeals, a court of last resort in many respects, by certiorari should be exercised cautiously, and writ issued only in cases involving great public concern and in matters of importance.—Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Yesbik, 91 S.E. 873, 146 Ga. 620, granting certiorari Yesbik v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 91 S.E. 274, 19 Ga.App. 252, affirmed 92 S. E. 527, 146 Ga. 769.

After waiver

It would be an abuse of discretion to allow certiorari to review an order to hold to bail, after a trial on the merits had been set aside, to one arrested in suit by capias who, by appearing and pleading after motions were heard and dismissed, waived the right even to have the order to hold to bail set aside after verdict at trial on the merits.—Central Lumber Co. v. Review of summary proceeding

To justify review of an order refusing leave to file an amended complaint and to grant a temporary injunction until a case can be heard on its merits, it must clearly appear that plaintiff in the action below has alleged facts which, if true, entitle it to a temporary injunction, and that failure to obtain such an injunction will work irreparable injury which will accrue before the case can be heard on the merits, or an established, the writ will never be denied in a proper case.⁶⁹

§ 12. — Writ Inadequate or Not Beneficial

The writ will be denied where its effect would be inadequate or vain.

In the exercise of the discretion heretofore discussed, the writ of certiorari will not be granted where the remedy afforded will be inadequate or where no beneficial result will follow.⁷⁰ Thus, the writ will not lie where its operation would be vain and useless,⁷¹ as where any judgment that might be entered would be futile;⁷² neither will the writ issue where it appears that if so issued it must inevitably be quashed,⁷³ as where the action of the inferior tribunal sought to be reviewed is correct.⁷⁴ Certiorari will not be granted to review an alleged determination by the superintendent of insurance where there has been no formal hearing or determination and the only possible return would consist of correspondence.⁷⁵ appeal will lie to the supreme court, as well as a showing that plaintiff has no other plain, speedy, or adequate remedy.—State v. Smith, 208 P. 1, 120 Wash. 540.

To review probate matters

The writ of certiorari to annul proceedings in the county court in probate matters is not a writ of right in the sense that the proceeding will be revised for errors as on appeal; relief is only granted in such a case where it is made to appear that the proceeding is void or that some substantial wrong or injustice to the estate has been done.—*Robertson v. Limit of inquiry as to useful purpose

While a writ of certiorari will not issue unless it may serve some good purpose, where the proceeding is had to review an admittedly void order of a school board, the inquiry to determine whether a good purpose is served thereby will not extend to the determination of the legality of prior acts of the board which may properly be inquired into in the civil action substituted for quo warranto.—State v. Thursby-Butte Special School Dist. No. 37, in McHenry County, 178 N.W. 787, 45 N.D. 555.

Relief impossible

Certiorari will not issue to review orders directing a special administrator to make certain payments, even though those orders were void, where the payments have already been made and the special administrator was not a party to certiorari so that judgment against him for the payments could not be rendered.—Manoogian v. Superior Court in and for Imperial County, 192 P. 168, 48 Cal.App. 609.

Inability to afford relief

(1) Since only the municipal court can approve an appeal undertaking under Code § 31, a writ of certiorari is not the proper remedy for the refusal to approve such undertaking, as the supreme court could give no relief on such a writ, but the proper remedy was by rule to show cause why the undertaking should not be accepted.—Vicory v. Totaro, 277 F. 546, 51 App.D.C. 144.

(2) The writ will not issue to review allegedly capricious orders of county commissioners redistricting a county as to commissioner districts where there can be no trial de novo to establish the population of the proposed districts.—State v. Board of Com'rs of King County, 263 P. 735, 146 Wash. 449.

Directed verdict proper

In certiorari proceedings an insurer on a policy providing for payment to insured in case of permanent disability is not entitled to have a judgment of civil court of record for insured quashed merely because the verdict was directed by such court, where the circuit court affirmed judgment on appeal, insurer offered no evidence, and evidence adduced by insured was consistent with allegations of declaration, did not tend to prove the asserted defense, and was ample to support verdict.—New England Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Huckins, Fla., 173 So. 696.

75. N.Y.—In re M. Groh's Sons, 167 N.Y.S. 883, 101 Misc. 611.

Certiorari should not be allowed where it would operate inequitably and unjustly;⁷⁶ or, as it is sometimes put, the courts are not inclined to allow the writ where the equities of the case do not warrant it.⁷⁷ It should not be employed where its use does an injustice and deprives one of a legal right which would have been established by the proceedings sought to be reviewed had that proceeding been conducted in compliance with the strict forms of law.⁷⁸ It is properly refused where the effect of a reversal would be to cause a loss of more efficient remedies or otherwise to cause prejudice;⁷⁹ or where, should the writ be granted and the proceedings quashed or reversed, mischievous consequences would ensue and the parties or third persons could not be placed in statu quo.⁸⁰

The court will also consider whether or not the issuance of the writ will lead to inextricable confusion.⁸¹

To public. Where great public detriment or inconvenience would result or might have resulted from interfering with the proceedings of public bodies which exercise rights in which the people at large are concerned, and no substantial injury would result from its refusal, the writ has been denied,⁸² and its allowance in such cases is discretionary.⁸³ Thus, in a case where the allowance of the writ would perhaps suspend for a considerable period of time the prosecution of a great public work of prime necessity to a large number of persons, the discretion lodged in a superior court in the matter of the allowance of the prerogative writ should be sparingly exercised.⁸⁴

§ 14. — Magnitude of Error

The writ will not issue in the absence of substantial injury or injustice to petitioner.

If the error is manifest and substantial injury has been sustained, the writ should be allowed in an otherwise proper case.⁸⁵ Conversely, in the absence of some substantial injury or manifest injustice to petitioner the writ should not, as a rule, issue.⁸⁶ Thus, where there is doubt as to petitioner's right to certiorari and its denial can work no ultimate injury to him it should be denied.⁸⁷ The writ may, and generally will, be denied where substantial justice has already been done,⁸⁸ where

An application for writ of certiorari to review resolution of board of chosen freeholders relating to procurement of voting machines will be denied, where court is unable to discern such substantial infirmity in proceedings attacked as to call for allowance of writ after consideration of statute involved, affidavits, and briefs.—Shachat v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Essex County, 189 A. 624, 15 N.J.Misc. 216.

Damage too remote

Length of time in business, methods employed to establish reputation for its cabbage seed, and fact that seeds which defendant raised under contract with plaintiff to be delivered to plaintiff were wrongfully withheld and may reach market without passing through its hands, does not entitle seed company to a writ to review an order vacating a temporary injunction, as cabbage seed is merely a commercial commodity, with a market value, and any damage that would result to the relator aside from its profit in handling the seed would be incidental and remote.—State v. § 15. — Existence of Other Remedies

Despite the fact that the issuance of certiorari is discretionary it will, as shown infra § 37, generally be denied where another equally adequate remedy is available elsewhere.

§ 16. — Laches and Limitations

As is shown infra § 66, generally certiorari will not be granted where the petitioner has been guilty of laches, or has not made application therefor in due season; but these objections are addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and the writ will be awarded or refused according as it may or may not promote the ends of justice.

§ 17. Judicial Nature of Proceedings Reviewable in General

- b. What are judicial or quasi-judicial acts

a. In General

Except in a few jurisdictions certiorari will not lie to review any acts not judicial or quasi-judicial in nature.

Certiorari is the appropriate process to review the proceedings of bodies, and officers acting in a judicial or a quasi-judicial character.⁹² Furthermore, it is unquestionably the general rule that this writ will lie for none other than acts partaking of a judicial nature.⁹³

tive and not conditioned on quasi-judicial investigation cannot be controlled by the writ, still it is the rule that where an inferior officer or board is charged with an administrative duty, the performance of which as an administrative act depends on and requires the existence or ascertainment of facts, the investigation of such facts is a quasi-judicial action reviewable by certiorari in so far as the facts in the record condition an administrative act.⁹⁶

Particular acts held judicial or quasi-judicial. The following acts, among others, have been held judicial or quasi-judicial: The action or determination of a county board as to a petition for the creation of a new county,⁹⁷ a petition to remove a county seat and remonstrances thereto,⁹⁸ as to notice of election for fire prevention district,⁹⁹ selection of newspaper for election notices,¹ laying out and establishing a highway,² rejecting a claim against the county,³ passing on bond of county officer,⁴ raising salaries of clerks,⁵ division of funds between school districts,⁶ the action or determination of a town board as to compensation due under a contract,⁷ or on a protest to an assessment for weed abatement,⁸ or in a proceeding for maintaining a nuisance;⁹ the action of a school board in locating a schoolhouse,¹⁰ or changing district boundaries;¹¹ an action by a board of adjustment with reference to a zoning ordinance;¹² action by common council with relation to audit of claim for refund of excess taxes;¹³ action by street commissioners as to permit to erect a garage;¹⁴ decision of insurance commissioner on application for license of an agent;¹⁵ and revocation by state racing commission of permit and license for dog race track.¹⁶ So, where animals are destroyed pursuant to a proper exercise of the police power, proceedings before commissioners to fix their value are judicial in their nature, so as to be reviewable by certiorari.¹⁷ The action of a county court in determining whether charges against a saloon keeper bring the case within the jurisdiction of the court to revoke his license is an exercise of judicial power, so as to be reviewable, although the mere revocation of the license is not the exercise of a judicial function.¹⁸

Decisions of public service commissioners consenting to the discontinuance of a station have been held judicial,¹⁹ as have determinations as to street railroad equipment,²⁰ and also determinations as to the right of a surface street railroad to operate its road with kinetic motors, where based on a public trial after notice to the parties interested.²¹ So, the writ lies to review a decision that public convenience and necessity require the construction of a railroad;²² and the issuance of a certificate of convenience and necessity for a railroad, by the board of railroad commissioners, is a judicial determination as to the incorporation of the railroad.²³ So, the extension of time in which a corporation might erect its dam is an exercise of quasi-judicial power.²⁴ The action of a public service commission establishing a through route for the transportation of passengers over two independent street railroad lines, and establishing and apportioning a joint fare, is judicial.²⁵ In one jurisdiction, the scope of the writ is much extended in reviewing findings of its railroad commission.²⁶

b. What Are Judicial or Quasi-Judicial Acts

The nature of the act rather than the officer or body performing it determines whether or not it is judicial or quasi-judicial.

As stated in Corpus Juris and approved by subsequent decisions it is difficult, if not impossible, precisely to define what are judicial or quasi-judicial acts,²⁷ and there is considerable conflict in the decisions in regard thereto in connection with the law as to when certiorari will lie. Nevertheless, there are some generally accepted principles whereby the judicial nature of official acts is ordinarily determinable. It is clear, for example, that it is the nature of the act to be performed, rather than of the office, board, or body which performs it, that determines whether or not it is the discharge of a judicial or a quasi-judicial function.²⁸ The proceeding may be judicial, although exercised by a quasi-judicial officer or body.²⁹ On the other hand, the fact that the person acting is a judge does not make the act judicial in character.³⁰

The mere exercise of judgment or discretion is not the criterion by which a proceeding must be viewed to determine whether or not it is judicial in this connection.³¹ Hence, the exercise of the judgment of an officer or board in determining the existence or nonexistence of facts is not necessarily a judicial act.³²

Wherever an officer or a body is clothed with authority and undertakes to determine the law and the rights of parties in regard to a matter in controversy, such officer or body may be said to act judicially in the sense in which we are speaking.³³

It is not essential that the proceedings should be strictly and technically judicial, in the sense in which that word is used when applied to courts of justice, but it is sufficient if they are quasi-judicial. It is enough if the officers act judicially in making their decision, whatever may be their public character.³⁴ It has been held that in order to render proceedings judicial they must affect the legal or property rights of the citizen in a manner analogous to the procedure of courts acting judicially.³⁵ An act affecting property rights of private persons is said to be clearly judicial.³⁶

The general rule seems to be that, if public notice is required in a proceeding before a local board not having the character of an ordinary court, and a hearing of objections to the contemplated action is provided for, and the order to be made is one which affects the property or the rights of citizens, the proceeding is judicial in nature, so as to be reviewable.³⁷ Furthermore, in order to render an act of an administrative or ministerial officer or body judicial in nature, it has been held that there must be notice and an opportunity to be heard,³⁸ and a hearing or judicial determination,³⁹ particularly where such notice and hearing is prescribed by law.⁴⁰

Right of appeal. The fact that no right of appeal is given has no bearing on the question whether the proceedings are judicial in their nature.⁴¹

There are stray decisions holding certiorari a proper remedy where it would seem that the act to be reviewed was neither judicial nor quasi-judicial, such point not having been urged or considered.⁴⁸ In this class are decisions that certiorari

A common council is not exercising judicial or quasi-judicial functions when it is disciplining one of its own members, for words spoken in debate.⁸⁸

The determination of the result of an election is ordinarily not subject to review by certiorari, on the theory that it is merely ministerial,⁸⁹ although the writ has been held proper, in such a case, in some jurisdictions.⁹⁰ So, other ministerial acts connected with elections are not reviewable by certiorari,⁹¹ including the manner of receiving or rejecting votes.⁹²

The granting or refusal of a license by a court or officer or board,⁹³ or the suspension⁹⁴ or revocation thereof,⁹⁵ is not ordinarily considered to be a diction, however, the function of certiorari is extended to include the review of municipal ordinances, purely legislative in character, where they are beyond the power or authority delegated to the legislating body or if any illegality existed in the enactment of such ordinances or otherwise.³

Under the general rule, the legislative action of a city or town council, board of supervisors, or the like, cannot be reviewed by the writ.⁴ To illustrate, it has been held that the following legislative acts are not reviewable: Granting,⁵ revoking,⁶ or regulating the exercise of,⁷ a franchise to use a street or a highway; the adoption or change of school books;⁸ the determination to issue bonds in conformity with the result of an election;⁹ borrowing money to improve highways, and issuing bonds therefor;¹⁰ the expenditure of city funds for an election;¹¹ the creation of a fire district;¹² fixing the boundaries of a drainage district;¹³ requiring the fencing of a city lot;¹⁴ the delegation of power to locate and purchase a site, and to incur an indebtedness for the erection of a building thereon;¹⁵ the division of a municipality into wards;¹⁶ the fixing of salaries of a board;¹⁷ the formation of school districts;¹⁸ and the organization of a new town out of part of an old one.¹⁹ The determination by a city council as to whether or not a petition was signed by a majority of the property owners, and whether certain land sought to be annexed abuts the city, have been held to be legislative and not judicial acts.²⁰ In some jurisdictions, the extension of city limits is held to partake of a judicial character so as to be reviewable by certiorari,²¹ while in others such an act is held to be legislative in character.²² The determination to open or close a street is considered to be legislative in some jurisdictions,²³ but is held to be judicial in others.²⁴

§ 19. Audit of Claims

Certiorari to review an audit of claims has been allowed in some jurisdictions and refused in others.

Whether certiorari will lie to review the audit of claims is not at all clear. It has been permitted in some jurisdictions.²⁵ Elsewhere, however, the audit of a claim by a board has been held not judicial in its nature so as to be reviewable by certiorari,²⁶ and the writ has been held not proper, for one reason or another, to review the allowance of illegal claims.²⁷

At common law the writ of certiorari was used both as a writ of review after final judgment and also to remove the entire cause at any stage of the proceeding for hearing and determination in the superior court.³⁰ In the United States it is now the general rule that the writ will be refused where there has been no final determination and the proceedings in the lower tribunal are still pending.³¹ It will not issue on the presumption that the court below, wherein the cause is pending, will commit error.³² Moreover, it has been held that after final disposition of the cause, certiorari will lie only to correct errors which affect such final judgment and not errors affecting only a judgment which is not final.³³

The general rule heretofore stated is not applied inflexibly in all jurisdictions.³⁴ Thus, it has been

Purpose of writ of certiorari is to quash an unlawful final judgment or some final and conclusive judicial order where there is no other method of relief therefrom.—Harrell v. Martin, 154 So. 186, 114 Fla. 147.

Final appellate judgment

Final adjudication of circuit court in exercise of appellate jurisdiction is reviewable on certiorari.—Ulsch v. Mountain City Mill Co., 138 So. 483, 103 Fla. 932, rehearing denied 140 So. 218, 103 Fla. 932, 104 Fla. 418.

Rulings preceding final judgment

Where the assignments of error were to specified rulings preceding final judgment, and there was no assignment of error to the judgment because of error in it or because of the antecedent errors complained of, the judge did not err in refusing to sanction the petition for a writ of certiorari.—Sullivan v. B. H. Levy Bros. & Co., 106 S.E. 19, 26 Ga.App. 319.

34. Dependent on use of writ

When the writ of certiorari is used to remove, from an inferior to a superior court, a case which the latter court has concurrent jurisdiction to hear and determine, the writ issues before the case has proceeded to a final judgment in the court below. When the writ is used to se-

held that the general supervisory control by courts over inferior judicial or quasi-judicial tribunals is not entirely taken away by a statutory declaration that the judgment of the inferior tribunal must be final before certiorari will lie.³⁵ It has also been held that a court of last resort may in the exercise of its final revisory and supervisory powers permit certiorari to issue to an interlocutory determination where the case presents exceptional circumstances and where probable and irreparable harm would result from delay in deciding the questions presented.³⁶ Furthermore, it is the rule in other states that the writ may lie even before final judgment to determine whether or not an inferior court or tribunal is proceeding without, or in excess of, its jurisdiction,³⁷ or has issued an order or judgment unduly extending its jurisdiction,³⁸ or is proceeding illegally.³⁹ In other jurisdictions, however, the rule is not relaxed even where a question of jurisdiction is involved.⁴⁰ In some other states it has been held that the writ will issue under special circumstances to special and summary tribunals which have not consummated their authority,⁴¹ although it will not issue before judgment in any case, unless the cause can be continued and completed in the superior court.⁴²

In New Jersey, the writ of certiorari substituted by statute for a writ of error, see supra § 9, will not lie until after final judgment,⁴³ in cases which cannot be completed by the court from which the writ must issue.⁴⁴ However, the so-called common-law certiorari, going to special and summary tribunals, may issue before the inferior jurisdiction has consummated its authority; it is, as to the time when it may issue, a discretionary writ, and in the absence of a statute requiring it to issue, the time for its allowance is discretionary.⁴⁵ Thus, when the purpose of this writ is to review the proceedings of a special tribunal in matters not legally brought within their jurisdiction or on complaint of irregular procedure in matters legally brought within its jurisdiction, the writ may issue before final decision,⁴⁶ although ordinarily it will not be allowed in the latter case until then, since such tribunal may correct its own errors.⁴⁷ Likewise, cure an appellate revision, by the superior tribunal, of the proceedings in the inferior court, to the end that errors appearing on the record may be corrected; it will not lie until after final judgment.—Downer v. Campbell, 21 Pa.Dist. & Co. 434.

Statutory exception

Under a statute so providing, certiorari will lie where a motion to quash the declaration on jurisdictional grounds, or the issues raised on a demurrer, plea to the jurisdiction or other dilatory plea decided adversely to the party moving, pleading, or demurring.—Boughner v. Bay City, 120 N.W. 597, 156 Mich. 193.

Interlocutory order restraining police officials from enforcing gambling statute against persons maintaining "pin game" was reviewable by certiorari in view of irreparable injury which would result from delaying review until final hearing could be obtained and public interest in enforcement of criminal statute involved.—Conte v. Roberts, R.I., 192 A. 814.

Not proper case for exception

Ruling allowing amendment of declaration to change plaintiff's name from "Cranston Loan Company, Incorporated," to "Cranston Loan Company," is not reviewable by certiorari, although motion to amend declaration was made almost eight years after action was commenced, since ruling was not a "final determination," facts were not sufficiently compelling to invoke exercise of supreme court's revisory and appellate jurisdiction under writ of certiorari, question raised was difficult to decide from record alone, and defendant's rights had been preserved by plea of statute of limitations filed to amended declaration.—*Cranston Loan Co. v. where the object of certiorari is to review municipal action, especially if that action is said to be beyond the corporate power, it is a frequent practice for the writ to issue while yet the final step that will complete the injury is threatened.⁴⁸ There are, however, exceptions to this practice.⁴⁹

Opinions and rulings. Certiorari will not lie to revise or correct erroneous opinions or rulings however hurtful they may be to individuals against whom they are expressed.⁵⁰ An order, judgment, or determination affecting the rights of the prosecutors is necessary as a foundation for the use of the writ.⁵¹

b. What Constitutes a Final Determination

- (1) In general
- (2) Intermediate appellate courts

(1) In General

The substance of finality rather than the form is generally determinative. The execution of a final judgment is not required.

It would appear that a judgment or decree final in substance although not in form is reviewable by certiorari.⁵² So, the act of a judge in declining to give judgment is equivalent to an entry of judgment so far as the right to bring certiorari, where the judge had made final disposition of the matter so far as he was concerned.⁵³ Moreover, some proceedings, although perhaps not technically final, may be endowed with such attributes of finality as to justify the exercise of judicial discretion in allowing certiorari to review the record thereof.⁵⁴ Nevertheless, it has been held that the writ of certiorari does not lie to review an adjudication which is final by implication merely.⁵⁵ It has also been held that, where no order has been made modifying a judgment after time for appeal or motion for new trial has elapsed, but the trial court indicates its intention of modifying the judgment

Resolution for removal of house

A writ of certiorari was not prematurely issued to review a resolution by a city council, authorizing the mayor to remove frame buildings erected on private property on the ground that they had been illegally and improperly constructed.—Public Service Ry. Co. v. City of Camden, supra.

No showing as to prosecutor's injury

Denial of injunction

Where an injunction is the only relief sought, a decree denying the injunction and retaining cause is in substance such a final decree authorizing certiorari from supreme court.—Cockrill v. People's Sav. Bank, supra.

Final plan

Under a statute providing that any person or public corporation affected by the final determination of the board may review it by certiorari on notice to the attorney general, the modification of reservoir plans by board of Hudson river regulating district to provide for construction of bridge instead of ferry is a final plan and final determination reviewable by certiorari.—Fulton County v. Board of Hudson River Regulating Dist., 248 N.Y.S. 8, 231 App.Div. 408.

Order vacating default judgment, which purports to deprive petitioner of a judgment entered at a prior term and also of the advantage acquired by a writ of garnishment and the execution, may be so final as to justify the allowance of certiorari to quash it provided the court had no jurisdiction to make the order.—Kroier v. Kroier, 116 So. 753, 95 Fla. 865.

Failure to comply with subpoena duces tecum

Where relator could assume that, if it failed to produce contracts called for in subpoena duces tecum, facts set out in motion would be taken for confessed, which fact would have resulted in rejection of its demand, its application for certiorari will not be considered as being premature.—Louisiana Farm Bureau Cotton Growers' Co-op. Ass'n v. Bacon, 105 So. 278, 159 La. 169.

Mandamus for inspection of books

Where stockholder of subsidiary corporation obtained peremptory writ of mandamus to inspect subsidiary and parent corporations' books, and corporations within proper time filed motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment, proceedings were not "pending and undetermined," but of sufficient "finality" to justify exercise of judicial discretion to grant certiorari to review record to subsidiary corporation.—State ex rel. United Brick & Tile Co. v. Wright, 95 S.W.2d 804, 339 Mo. 160.

Pendency of hearing on show cause rule

Where district court, on application to advance hearing on rule against surviving spouse to show cause why suspensive appeal from judgment appointing administratrix should not be dismissed, refused application and stated that proper tribunal to dismiss appeal was supreme court, the appointee could apply for certiorari and mandamus to compel district judge to set aside suspensive appeal, prior to date set for hearing on rule, particularly as order purporting to grant suspensive appeal was absolute nullity.—Succession of Pavelka, 102 So. 579, 157 La. 480.

after the completion of certain computations, certiorari will not lie.⁵⁶

Where three separate items of damages all arise and are claimed under one cause of action, there cannot be a final judgment granting or denying a part of the damages and at the same time contemplating further proceedings in the suit to determine liability as to the remainder of the damages.⁵⁷

A determinative order of a quasi-judicial legal body granting or denying a statutory right or privilege after notice and hearing may be final and reviewable by certiorari.⁵⁸

Execution of judgment. It is not necessary to wait until the final order or judgment has been carried into effect. It may be reviewed as soon as a final adjudication has been had.⁵⁹

Particular determinations as final. The courts have frequently had occasion to determine whether or not particular judgments, decrees, or orders are of sufficient finality so as to warrant the issuance of certiorari for their review. For example, it has been held that the writ will not lie to review intermediate⁶⁰ or interlocutory orders,⁶¹ and this includes an order refusing or dissolving an injunction;⁶² an order striking out a pleading;⁶³ an order striking out part of the answer or bringing in a new party;⁶⁴ an order overruling a demurrer based on jurisdiction;⁶⁵ an order granting a new trial;⁶⁶ or a refusal to grant a new trial where the proceedings are still pending;⁶⁷ an order continuing a cause for trial;⁶⁸ an order that a party answer interrogatories propounded to him in the taking of depositions;⁶⁹ or intermediate orders in condemnation proceedings.⁷⁰ It has been held, however, that where interlocutory rulings on a plea of lis pendens are brought before the supreme court along with a plea to the jurisdiction, such rulings may be passed on.⁷¹

The writ has also been held not to lie in the following cases: Where the judgment against a party is retained for further orders, and there is no judgment disposing of the costs or directing payment of them;⁷² order refusing to dismiss an action on a stipulation over the objection of plaintiff's attorney;⁷³ order for an account in a municipal investigation;⁷⁴ allowance of an appeal;⁷⁵ judgment of federal circuit court of appeals re-

No finding of insolvency

Application for writ to review order of superior court dissolving temporary restraining order which by statute is not appealable must be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction in supreme court, in absence of finding of insolvency of parties against whom restraining order was sought, because the legislative intent is that such orders shall be reviewed only on appeal from a final judgment.—State v. The following, among others, have been held final adjudications so as to be reviewable by certiorari: Sustaining of a general demurrer to the entire complaint;⁸³ action of a county board on a claim presented for audit, where the claim is passed on, and allowed in part and rejected in part;⁸⁴ order directing clerk to issue a warrant for levy of taxes;⁸⁵ confirmation of a commissioner's report in partition;⁸⁶ confirmation of settlement of sheriff's accounts;⁸⁷ order dismissing a city sanitation employee;⁸⁸ entry of judgment of fine and imprisonment for contempt;⁸⁹ order directing sale of decedent's land to pay debts;⁹⁰ partial rejection of a claim by the town auditor;⁹¹ order dismissing an appeal.⁹² Likewise, an order by a probate court directing an executor to turn over funds which he claims to hold as an individual is a final order reviewable by certiorari,⁹³ as is a decree of an orphans' court ordering a restatement of an executor's account, allowing exceptions, and referring the account to auditors.⁹⁴ Where a garnishment based on a judgment already obtained is disposed of by a finding against the traverse to the answer of the garnishee, amounting to a discharge of the garnishee, such finding is a final judgment reviewable by certiorari, although, pending the trial, additional garnishment summons was served on the garnishee.⁹⁵

(2) Intermediate Appellate Courts

A judgment of an intermediate appellate court is final, as to the right to certiorari, only when it disposes of the controversy and leaves nothing to be done below except to execute it.

A judgment or decree of an intermediate appellate court which disposes of the controversy and leaves nothing further to be done in the trial court except to carry the mandate of such appellate court into execution is a final adjudication of the cause in so far as review by certiorari is concerned.⁹⁶ Where, however, the intermediate appellate court reverses the judgment below and remands the cause for further proceedings, there is ordinarily no such final determination as will support a review by certiorari.⁹⁷ An exception to the foregoing rules is recognized in some jurisdictions where it appears from the record that the appellate court has violated statutory requirements,⁹⁸ or where it appears that the judgment of reversal amounts to a palpable miscarriage of justice or constitutes a substantial injury to the rights of petitioner,⁹⁹ or where it appears that a judgment of reversal contains an affirmative direction to the court below to proceed in violation of some essential requirement of law in the ultimate judgment which must be rendered pursuant to the appellate court's directions in its mandate.¹

An intermediate appeals court's judgment affirming a lower court's judgment on condition of a remittitur is not final, in the absence of a showing in the record that a remittitur has been entered.²

§ 21. Successive Writs

Successive or alias writs of certiorari are allowed in some jurisdictions.

While it has been held that a second writ cannot be allowed for the same purpose,³ it has also been held that a second writ may issue to bring in new parties,⁴ that, where the writ is improverly directed, the court may order a new or supplementary writ to issue,⁵ and that as many writs may issue as are necessary to bring up the whole record.⁶ A second or alias writ will not be issued where the petitioner has failed to exercise due diligence in procuring the first to be issued and heard,⁷ or, it has been held, unless some extraordinary circumstance is shown, which will warrant its allowance.⁸

Where a certiorari has been dismissed for want of prosecution, a second writ should not be allowed to the prosecutor.⁹ Similarly, where the writ is dismissed on the merits, that is, for the reason that the petitioner therefor was not entitled to it, the judgment of dismissal is a bar to the subsequent issuance of another writ.¹⁰

Affirmance is a bar to the subsequent issuance of another writ, on the application of the prosecutor of the first writ, for the purpose of reviewing the same proceedings.¹¹

In Georgia it is the rule that, after a valid writ has been dismissed for informality, another may be awarded on timely application,¹² although the time has elapsed within which the original certiorari could issue,¹³ although, however, if the original petition was not presented within the required time and was thus properly dismissed, it cannot be revived by a second certiorari within the statutory period relating to the recommencement of a case after nonsuit or dismissal.¹⁴ On the other hand, if the first petition for the writ is void for any reason, a renewal is properly refused;¹⁵ but to render the original petition void in this connection there must be something inherently defective in the petition itself, something precedent to the issuance of the writ.¹⁶

B. PARTICULAR GROUNDS FOR GRANT OR REFUSAL OF WRIT

§ 22. In General

- a. Matters of public concern
- b. Preservation of harmony in decisions
- c. Inability to obtain impartial trial
- d. Ruling on motion for change of venue
- e. Questions of fact and evidence
- f. Review of incidental proceeding
- g. Review of proceeding not involving property

a. Matters of Public Concern

The writ may lie to review determinations involving important public questions.

The writ has been granted to review matters of important public concern,¹⁷ even where another remedy is available.¹⁸ This is not, however, a universally accepted rule.¹⁹ It has been held that the writ will not lie for such a purpose, where delay will result, unless the proceeding was without jurisdiction or in gross violation of law.²⁰

It has been held that the supreme court should take original jurisdiction to review the determinations of an inferior quasi-judicial tribunal only in cases involving questions of publici juris.²¹

Where the public interest would be prejudiced by the issuance of the writ, it may be refused, see supra § 14. Likewise, the court will not determine questions, even though they be of public interest, if such questions are moot, see infra § 32. The availability of the writ where important new questions are involved is considered infra § 33.

b. Preservation of Harmony in Decisions

Failure of an intermediate appellate court to follow the decisions of a higher court is reviewable by certiorari in some jurisdictions.

Failure of an intermediate appellate court to follow decisions of a higher court is sometimes held a ground for certiorari.²² Thus, in some jurisdictions the writ may be granted where the court in pronouncing judgment has ignored some previous decision of the higher court,²³ or where an ap-

Erroneous but not contrary to decisions

Where the supreme court decided that a petition stated a cause of action in mandamus, but expressly left the question as to whether the action could be maintained on the facts open to the trial court, a depellate court fails to follow the rulings of the supreme court.²⁴ It has been held, however, that the commission of an error by an intermediate appellate court will not require the issuance of certiorari to review and revise the judgment of such court where it had reversed the judgment of the original court on other grounds not complained of.²⁵

c. Inability to Obtain Impartial Trial

Prejudice of the judge or members of an inferior tribunal is not generally considered a good ground for review by certiorari.

It has been held that the writ of certiorari may be granted on the ground that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the inferior tribunal.²⁶ It is doubtful, however, if this is a ground for the writ in most jurisdictions, at least unless the judge is so disqualified as perhaps to constitute a want or excess of jurisdiction,²⁷ or unless the determination of the judge or members of the inferior tribunal is such as to be reviewable as being illegal or in excess of his or their authority.²⁸ Thus, it has been held that prejudice on the part of the judge or members of an inferior tribunal, or a suspicion of improper conduct on their part does not constitute a sufficient ground for the issuance of the writ.²⁹

d. Ruling on Motion for Change of Venue

There is some disharmony of opinion as to whether or not certiorari will lie to a ruling on a motion for change of venue.

It is the rule in some jurisdictions that certiorari is a proper remedy to review an order denying a change of venue to one entitled thereto,³⁰ at least when entitled thereto as a matter of right.³¹ cision by the court of appeals that the facts established that mandamus was not the proper remedy, although erroneous, is not reviewable by certiorari as contrary to the decision of the supreme court.—People v. Court of Appeals, 82 P. 433, 34 Colo. 291.

Where court of appeals refuses to be guided, in clear case, by the well established jurisprudence, as defined and laid down by the supreme court, the writ lies to enforce uniformity of jurisprudence throughout the state.—*Brown Shoe Co. v. Denial of motion to disqualify judge
It has been held that a denial of a motion to disqualify the chairman of a state horse racing commission on the ground of prejudice or personal interest, and the refusal of the commission to hear evidence on such motion, is prejudicial error for which certiorari will lie in the absence of any other remedy; and that by failing to petition for a writ of prohibition to prohibit the chairman from sitting at the hearing a licensed racing association and its president did not waive their right to raise question of disqualification of chairman of state division of horse racing to sit at hearing of charges against them in proceeding for certiorari to review and quash record of such hearing.—*Narragansett Racing Ass'n v. Objection that plaintiff's attorney was acting for judge of county in which case was tried, in that filing fees were paid out of deposit of judge with county clerk, and that judge was in reality practicing in violation of statute, was not shown by evidence to have influenced judge sitting in case, and such impropriety cannot be raised by certiorari.—Hudson Taxi Co. v. Niedzwicki, 130 A. 647, 3 N.J. Misc. 1111.

Right independent of merits

(1) Where a party has a right, independent of merits of issues pending, to trial in a particular place, an extraordinary legal remedy, such as certiorari, is proper method of procedure to test such right in supreme court.—State ex rel. Hand v. Superior Court of Grays Harbor County, Wash., 71 P.2d 24—State ex rel. Gamble v. Superior Court for King County, Wash., 66 P.2d 1135—State v. Superior Court of Washington for

In other jurisdictions, the erroneous denial of motion for change of venue is not necessarily such an "illegality," see infra § 24 a, as will constitute a ground for review by certiorari.³² Thus, where the error complained of was merely an error in the determination of a disputed fact which the lower court had jurisdiction to decide, the writ will not lie.³³ If, however, in passing on such a motion the court imposes conditions not authorized by law, it acts illegally, and certiorari will lie to review it³⁴ where there is no appeal from such order.³⁵ Even this presupposes that the motion so overruled was proper under the statute pertaining thereto.³⁶

In still other jurisdictions, it is held that an order denying a change of venue is not final and cannot be reviewed by certiorari.³⁷

In a jurisdiction where the writ will only lie for excess of jurisdiction on great abuse of discretion, the granting of a motion for a change of venue by a court with jurisdiction of the action on a point not involving discretion is not reviewable by certiorari.³⁸

e. Questions of Fact and Evidence

The writ will not lie to review questions of fact, but may lie where there has been no showing of facts necessary to jurisdiction.

As is shown infra § 172, the probative force or the weight and sufficiency of the evidence is not ordinarily reviewable on certiorari, hence the writ will not lie, in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, for the purpose of reviewing conclusions of fact or rulings involving findings of fact.³⁹ This rule extends to writs sought to review questions of fact determined in intermediate appellate courts.⁴⁰ In some jurisdictions, however, a mistaken finding of fact induced by an error of law apparent of record or the finding of a fact contrary to law is correctable on certiorari.⁴¹ It has also been held that where the decision of the intermediate appellate court shows a misapplication of the law to the facts as a basis for the judg-

Permissible fact determination

Certiorari will not lie to quash a judgment of an intermediate appellate court affirming a judgment of a lower court which was simply the permissible result of a judicial determination of a disputed issue of fact.—Ex parte Knights of Pythias of North America, South America, Europe, Asia, Africa, and Australia, Jurisdiction of Florida, 174 So. 464, 128 Fla. 315.

ment of that court, the writ must issue unless it appears that the judgment is correct, notwithstanding the error.⁴²

The writ will not lie because of errors committed in passing on the admissibility of evidence, where the inferior court or tribunal has jurisdiction to do so,⁴³ and where it conducted its proceedings in the mode required by law⁴⁴ and had sufficient evidence before it to authorize the determination made.⁴⁵

Where a tribunal is clothed with authority and jurisdiction to act only on the existence of certain facts and it receives no evidence tending to show the existence of such facts, its action is reviewable by certiorari as being void for want of jurisdiction, where no right of appeal is available.⁴⁶ Similarly, where the power to make the order complained of depends on the existence of facts as to which there is no evidence whatever, the question is one of law subject to review by direct attack on a writ of certiorari.⁴⁷ Furthermore, where in the exigencies of the case such facts are required to be established by evidence of a particular kind and the showing made totally fails in this respect, the writ will lie.⁴⁸

f. Review of Incidental Proceeding

Certiorari does not lie to remove a proceeding in an action or suit which is merely incidental to it.

The writ will not lie to remove a proceeding in an action or suit which is but a part of and merely incidental to it.⁴⁹ It will not lie solely to review a question of the taxation of costs.⁵⁰

g. Review of Proceeding Not Involving Property

It is not necessary that property rights be involved.

In proper cases the writ will lie from a superior court to an inferior tribunal, irrespective of the question whether property rights are involved in the matter or not.⁵¹

§ 23. Want or Excess of Jurisdiction

- a. As ground for issuance of writ generally
- b. Excess of jurisdiction as ground
- c. What constitutes jurisdictional error
- d. Jurisdictional error as sole ground

a. As Ground for Issuance of Writ Generally

Want or excess of jurisdiction on the part of courts or quasi-judicial bodies is a good ground for the issuance of certiorari.

The writ of certiorari will lie to inquire into and review determinations made without jurisdiction or in excess of the jurisdiction conferred.⁵² This is

Equity

It is well settled that, where the chancellor is acting in excess of his jurisdiction, the writ of certiorari will lie in the supreme court.—Gilbreath v. Willett, 251 S.W. 910, 148 Tenn. 92, 28 A.L.R. 1147.

Matter as to which jurisdiction not invoked

Court's jurisdiction and power, until invoked, lie dormant, and if court proceeds, in matter in which its jurisdiction has not been invoked, in summary manner, or in new course different from common law, proceedings are without jurisdiction and common-law certiorari is appropriate remedy to review and quash such proceedings.—Ex parte Wilkey, 172 So. 111, 233 Ala. 375.

Matter as to which jurisdiction exhausted

Employee is entitled to certiorari to quash order of circuit court requiring him to submit to an operation or lose compensation which court had by final judgment awarded to employee, since court exhausted its jurisdiction with respect thereto, in absence of motion to set aside judgment awarding compensation, or motion to grant new trial.—Ex parte

State ex rel. Rush, 171 So. 630, 233 Ala. 345.

In Georgia, it has been held that the question as to the jurisdiction of the court over the subject matter cannot properly be raised by petition for certiorari.—Hillyer v. Magruder, 103 S.E. 738, 25 Ga.App. 501.

Relief beyond jurisdiction

The question on certiorari to the circuit court, which refused to dismiss an action, is not whether certain of the relief sought was beyond its jurisdiction, but whether any of the relief sought is within its jurisdiction.—Davison v. Circuit Court of Kingsbury County, in Ninth Judicial Circuit, 173 N.W. 737, 42 S.D. 254.

No presumption of improper action

Where the record brought up by certiorari merely shows that the lower court denied petitioner's motion to dismiss the suit against him, it shows no action by the court in the case since such dismissal, and it cannot be presumed that the lower court will proceed without jurisdiction, so that the proper remedy was not certiorari.—Chew v. Superior Court, 110 A. 605, 43 R.I. 194.

Correct determination immaterial

Supreme court will quash record of court of appeals on certiorari where amount involved exceeded its jurisdiction, regardless of whether it followed the last decisions of the supreme court.—State ex rel. Long v. Ellison, 199 S.W. 984, 272 Mo. 571, quashing record Clark v. Long, App., 196 S.W. 409.

Essential step omitted

Certiorari will lie to review erroneous assumption of jurisdiction by district court, where an essential statutory step was omitted on appealing to it from justice court.—Yowell v. District Court of Fourth Judicial Dist., in and for Elko County, 159 P. 632, 39 Nev. 423.

Necessity of excess of jurisdiction

Where petition for certiorari in district court of appeal alleged that respondent municipal court exceeded jurisdiction in granting judgment, but did not allege that superior court, also made a party respondent, exceeded its jurisdiction in affirming municipal court's judgment, writ could not be granted against superior court, the proceeding being attempt to obtain second review of municipal court's judgment on matters reviewed by court of competent appellate jurisdiction, and before the writ of certiorari can be granted there must have been an excess of jurisdiction by that court.—Kempton v. Appellate Division of Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, 39 P.2d 846, 3 Cal.App.2d 374.

Excess not shown

Certiorari will not issue to judge of juvenile court on the ground of an excess of authority, where defendant was ordered to pay alimony to his child, to furnish a guaranty, or conditional bond, and in default in furnishing such bond to be held for further orders of the court.—State v. Clark, 78 So. 742, 143 La. 481.

probate courts.⁵⁹

Quasi-judicial bodies. This rule that a want or excess of jurisdiction is a ground for certiorari is not limited to courts or strictly judicial bodies, but includes those of a quasi-judicial nature.⁶⁰ It has even been held that, where a statutory tribunal acts without jurisdiction, the writ will lie to such action, even though nothing has been done thereunder.⁶¹ Among the boards and tribunals exercising quasi-judicial functions to which the general rule has been applied are boards of arbitration,⁶² boards of equalization,⁶³ boards of supervisors,⁶⁴ civil service commissioners,⁶⁵ common councils,⁶⁶ county commissioners,⁶⁷ drain commissioners,⁶⁸ fence viewers,⁶⁹ highway commissioners,⁷⁰ commissioners or boards to regulate dentistry,⁷¹ liquor control boards,⁷² police commissioners,⁷³ school trustees,⁷⁴ town or township boards,⁷⁵ and others of a similar nature.

In tribunals of special and limited jurisdiction the particular facts and circumstances on which their jurisdiction is based must appear on the face of the proceedings, and if they do not thus appear certiorari will lie.⁷⁶

b. Excess of Jurisdiction as Ground

Excess or overreaching of jurisdiction is a good ground for review by certiorari.

Although "excess" of jurisdiction may be said to be different from "want" of jurisdiction, it is difficult to define, accurately and satisfactorily, what is an "excess" of jurisdiction, although it is often expressly declared a separate ground for the writ.⁷⁷ Indeed, by statute in some states excess of jurisdiction is the only ground mentioned.⁷⁸

Orders exceeding the powers of the court making them have been held to be in excess of jurisdiction and reviewable by the writ.⁷⁹ Furthermore, any departure from the recognized and established requirements of law, however close the apparent adherence to mere form in method of procedure, which has the effect to deprive one of a constitutional right, is as much an excess of jurisdiction as where there is an inceptive lack of power.⁸⁰ In the case of a tribunal exercising administrative or quasi-judicial powers, excess of jurisdiction has

Excess of jurisdiction defined

Excess of jurisdiction, as distinguished from absence of jurisdiction, means that an act, although within the general power of a tribunal or board, is not authorized and is invalid with respect to the particular proceeding because the conditions which alone authorize the exercise of the general power in respect of it are wanting.—Conners v. been held to include every decision, ruling, or order which materially affects the substantial rights of applicant for the writ, and which it is claimed was either made because of a wrong interpretation of the law, a failure to follow or apply the law, or without any competent evidence to support it, or against the undisputed credible evidence sustaining the burden of proof.⁸¹ Where a quasi-judicial body acts, not on a conflict of evidence, but in spite of any competent evidence, it exceeds its jurisdiction.⁸² A statutory order for the examination of books and papers has been held reviewable on the ground of excess of jurisdiction, where no proper showing is made to support the order.⁸³ An order arbitrarily causing the complaint to be stricken from the files on the ground that it improperly made the judge a party for the sole purpose of disqualifying him has been held reviewable on certiorari on this ground.⁸⁴

On the other hand, an order denying a motion to dismiss,⁸⁵ or an erroneous assumption of fact,⁸⁶ or an erroneous allowance of a motion to put a case on the jury calendar,⁸⁷ or a mere misconception of the law,⁸⁸ has been held not to constitute an excess of jurisdiction reviewable by certiorari. It has also been held that it cannot be said that the court has exceeded its jurisdiction, so as to authorize the writ, merely because it has erred in holding that service of summons in a particular manner, or on a particular person, conferred jurisdiction over some other person by reason of the legal relationship existing, or alleged to have existed, between the two persons, or has erred in holding that certain conduct or statements of a party or his counsel in open court constituted a general appearance whereby the court acquired jurisdiction over the person.⁸⁹

c. What Constitutes Jurisdictional Error

- (1) In general
- (2) Want of service or notice
- (3) Original want of jurisdiction where case appealed
- (4) Divestiture of jurisdiction by dismissal of appeal

(1) In General

Jurisdictional error relating to either the parties or to the subject matter is reviewable.

Jurisdictional error may relate either to the person or to the subject matter.⁹⁰ It may consist of: (1) Want of notice or the absence of some preliminary proceeding necessary to give jurisdiction to the inferior court. (2) Want of jurisdiction in any court. (3) Want of jurisdiction of the particular court.⁹¹ Lack of jurisdiction is not shown by erroneous views, incorrect reasonings, or the erroneous admission of evidence,⁹² nor by failure to make out a cause of action.⁹³ So, defective pleadings are not jurisdictional,⁹⁴ and the writ will not lie to re-

Distinctions stated

(1) By "jurisdiction of the parties" is meant the presence in court of the parties whose rights are to be concluded or affected by the judgment rendered, and "jurisdiction of the subject matter" means jurisdiction of the nature of the action and the relief sought.—Ex parte Kelly, 128 So. 443, 221 Ala. 339.

(2) Jurisdiction of the subject matter refers to the power to deal with the general abstract question, to hear the particular facts in any case relating to such question, and to determine whether or not they are sufficient to justify the exercise of that power.—City of Phoenix v. Greer, 29 P.2d 1062, 43 Ariz. 214.

view the action of a judge in appointing a referee.⁹⁵ Likewise, the omission of a necessary party is not a jurisdictional defect.⁹⁶ A court does not exceed its jurisdiction so as to render its judgment reviewable by certiorari merely because it decides a case on an issue which was not involved, and hence the determination of collateral matters not involved cannot be said to be without the jurisdiction of the court.⁹⁷ Defects in a summons actually served or irregularities in the service have been held not to constitute jurisdictional error.⁹⁸ It has been held, however, that fatal defects in the summons which invalidate the process and prevent the attachment of jurisdiction over the person served therewith is reviewable by certiorari.⁹⁹ The correction of a judgment,¹ or the setting aside of a default,² by a court with authority to do so is not jurisdictional. The fact that a superior court may have committed error in reversing the judgment of a municipal court does not make it a jurisdictional error.³ The expiration of the statute of limitations, even if a good defense, does not deprive a quasi-judicial body of jurisdiction.⁴

On the other hand, certiorari will lie to judgments or orders made by a trial court without authority so to act.⁵ There is a want of jurisdiction where the judge before whom the proceeding is heard is disqualified to sit.⁶ The making of an order by a lower court, after an appeal has been taken and a stay bond filed, is without jurisdiction.⁷ The unauthorized cancellation by one judge of an order made by another,⁸ the granting of an injunction beyond the court's power,⁹ and the unauthorized allowance of a continuance in a foreclosure suit under a mortgage moratorium act,¹⁰ have also been held to be jurisdictional errors in this connection. Moreover, the rendition of a decree or judgment after plaintiff has dismissed the suit may be reviewed.¹¹ The granting of a new trial solely on a ground not designated in the controlling statute, as shown by its order, is a jurisdictional error reviewable by the writ.¹² Furthermore, it has been held that a refusal to award costs where their allowance is mandatory under the statute is jurisdictional and reviewable by certiorari.¹³

Refusal to dismiss an appeal, where the appellate court is without jurisdiction, is reviewable.¹⁴

(2) Want of Service or Notice

Certiorari lies to review the question as to jurisdiction over the person by service and to review the court's jurisdiction to make ex parte orders without notice.

Certiorari lies to raise the question whether proper service has been made and jurisdiction acquired over the person.¹⁶ Actual notice received by a party to proceedings before an inferior statutory tribunal will, however, generally bar relief by certiorari, although it was not received in the form or through the channel provided by the statute.¹⁷

Where notice of the appointment of a receiver is required to be given after the appearance of defendant, an order appointing a receiver, made on ex parte application after the appearance of defendant in the action, has been held to be made without jurisdiction so as to be reviewable.¹⁸ An order vacating a judgment of dismissal without giving defendant notice thereof, as required by statute, is reviewable on the ground that it is void for want of jurisdiction.¹⁹ The dissolution of an injunction on defendant's application, without notice to plaintiff or any hearing, may be reviewed, as the court lacks the power to dissolve an injunction under such circumstances.²⁰ Where, however, a court has jurisdiction to correct its records, an objection to an order correcting the record, as being in excess of the court's jurisdiction because made ex parte without notice to petitioner, will not be reviewed by certiorari.²¹

(3) Original Want of Jurisdiction Where Case Appealed

The decisions are in conflict as to whether an original want of jurisdiction will warrant the issuance of the writ where the court to which the court was appealed has jurisdiction.

It has been held that want of jurisdiction in the court below is equally a want of it in the appellate court, so far as the right to the writ is concerned.²² It is the rule in other jurisdictions that the fact that the court in which the proceedings were originally instituted was without jurisdiction, or acted in excess of its jurisdiction, is not a ground for the writ where the court to which such proceedings were transferred had jurisdiction.²³

(4) Divestiture of Jurisdiction by Dismissal of Appeal

The erroneous dismissal of an appeal is not reviewable by certiorari as a jurisdictional error.

The dismissal of an appeal is not reviewable by certiorari because of error therein, since erroneously to dismiss an appeal is no more jurisdictional than erroneously to decide the merits of a cause.²⁴ Thus, a court, in dismissing an appeal from a justice on the ground that an undertaking has not been filed in a justice's court, does not exceed its jurisdiction so as to authorize a review by certiorari.²⁵ In other words, the improper divestiture of jurisdiction, such as an erroneous dismissal of an appeal, is not an excess of jurisdiction so as to be reviewable. In jurisdictions where the scope of the writ is very broad and not confined to jurisdictional questions, the writ has been held to lie where an appeal has been improperly dismissed,²⁶ or

Submission to jurisdiction by appeal

(1) Certiorari will not lie to review an affirmation by a superior court of a judgment of the small claims court, since by appealing to the superior court petitioner submitted to jurisdiction of that court although small claims court had no jurisdiction.—Meads v. Warne, 23 P. 2d 773, 133 Cal.App. 27.

where an appeal lawfully dismissed has been improperly reinstated.²⁷

d. Jurisdictional Error as Sole Ground

In some jurisdictions jurisdictional error is the sole ground for review by certiorari.

It is the rule in not a few states that certiorari will lie only where there is a want or an excess of jurisdiction in the proceedings sought to be reviewed.²⁸ As shown infra § 24, this is the rule in another group of states, subject to the exception, if it can be called an exception, that the writ also lies where the court or tribunal has acted "illegally" or irregularly; in still other states the scope of the writ is still wider.

§ 24. Illegality or Irregularity of Proceedings

- a. In general
- b. Errors or irregularities within jurisdiction

a. In General

In addition to jurisdictional error certiorari will lie in some states for illegality, irregular pursuit of authority, abuse of authority, failure to follow essential legal requirements, and the like.

While the review by certiorari is limited strictly to jurisdictional matters in many jurisdictions, see supra § 23 d, in many other states, by express statutory provision or by construction of the controlling statute, other irregularities and abuses by in-

Acts of governor

(1) Certiorari will lie to review acts of the governor of the state only where he has exceeded his jurisdiction.—State ex rel. Olson v. Welford, 260 N.W. 593, 65 N.D. 522—State ex rel. Wehe v. Frazier, 182 N.W. 545, 47 N.D. 314.

(2) Where the governor has removed a commissioner of the Workmen's Compensation Bureau without a hearing as required, certiorari lies.—State v. Frazier, supra.

In Missouri

(1) The writ is limited to review of jurisdictional error (that is for want, excess, or "abuse" of jurisdiction) "or where there is no remedy by appeal or writ of error."—State ex rel. Lunsford v. Landon, 265 S.W. 529, 304 Mo. 654—11 C.J. p 103 note 24.

(2) It was held, however, that, where a state court sustains an application for the removal of a cause to a federal court, it is equivalent to a refusal to take any further action in the case, and that inasmuch as there is no appeal from the order, either to a state or to a federal court, certiorari lies to review the order, on the theory that the scope of review by certiorari is not limited entirely to a question of jurisdiction, but may comprehend an error appearing on the face of the record which cannot be reached by appeal or writ of error.—State v. Mosman, 133 S.W. 38, 231 Mo. 474.

In Utah

(1) It has been held that the court will inquire only as to questions relating to jurisdiction.—People's Bonded Trustee v. Wight, 272 P. 200, 72 Utah 587.

(2) However, although an absolute lack of "excess of jurisdiction" cannot be shown by one seeking the writ, it can still be issued in the sound discretion of the higher court.—Olson v. District Court of Salt Lake County, 71 P.2d 529, 112 A.L.R. 438.

In Wisconsin

(1) The rule stated in the above text seems to be in force in this state.—State v. Willcuts, 122 N.W. 1048, 140 Wis. 448—Gaster v. Whit-cher, 94 N.W. 787, 117 Wis. 668, 98 Am.S.R. 968.

(2) It has been held, however, that in ordinary cases where the writ goes to courts or inferior tribunals exercising judicial powers, it lies only to review jurisdictional error, but in respect of an officer having only quasi-judicial power who acts in proceedings of a summary character, out of the course of the common law, the writ will lie to inquire whether such person, having jurisdiction, has kept within, and has acted strictly according to, the law.—State v. Whitford, 11 N.W. 424, 54 Wis. 150.

ferior courts and tribunals are also included within the scope of review by the writ. Thus, the writ will lie to review inferior courts or tribunals exercising judicial functions where they have proceeded illegally,²⁹ or illegally and contrary to the course of procedure applicable to them,³⁰ or have not regularly pursued their authority,³¹ or have greatly abused their authority,³² or have failed to proceed according to the essential requirements of justice and law,³³ or where the judgment is a palpable miscarriage of justice resulting in substantial injury to petitioner,³⁴ or where the procedure contains es-

Review of intermediate appellate court

(1) Under a statute providing that, where the circuit court has rendered a judgment in any case appealed from the civil court of record, it shall be competent for the supreme court, by certiorari or otherwise, to require any such case to be certified to the supreme court for review and determination with the same power and authority in the case as if it had been carried by writ of error to the supreme court, the supreme court will not quash appellate judgment of the circuit court unless the record discloses that circuit court exceeded its jurisdiction or did not proceed according to essential legal requirements, or that it violated established legal principles, or that its judgment is palpable miscarriage of justice, or that result is substantial injury to petitioner's legal rights, or that judgment is illegal or essentially irregular and violative of established legal principles resulting in prejudice to petitioner.—Miami Poultry & Egg Co. v. City Ice & Fuel Co., Fla., 172 So. 82—Bringley v. C. I. T. Corporation, 160 So. 680, 119 Fla. 529—Ulsch v. stantial defects or irregularities,³⁵ and there is no other adequate remedy, see infra § 37. To sum up the decisions in these states, it is believed that they all, or practically all, agree, at least in general, that this ground for the writ means merely an inquiry whether the form of proceeding legally applicable to the case was followed, and not whether the rulings of the court on the law and the evidence, and in the application of the law to the facts, were correct.³⁶ Furthermore, it is submitted that this so-called "illegality" or irregularity, while not distinctly referred to as such in other states, would be held at least in some states, if the occasion arose, to be embraced within the ground "excess" of jurisdiction, using the word "excess" in a loose sense.³⁷

In some jurisdictions the scope of the writ is very broad, see supra § 9, and it has been held to lie for the correction of errors committed by the trial court.³⁸

b. Errors or Irregularities within Jurisdiction

The writ will not lie as a rule to correct errors in the exercise of legally existent jurisdiction.

Since it is the rule in most jurisdictions that certiorari cannot be used as a substitute for an appeal or writ of error, see Appeal and Error §§ 9, 17, it will not as a rule lie to correct errors in the exercise of jurisdiction legally existent,³⁹ except in-

(2) Supreme court in cases appealed from civil court of record to circuit court may entertain certiorari in case of palpable abuse of power, or misconduct or clear failure to consider evidence, or application of erroneous rule of law.—Brundage v. O'Berry, 134 So. 520, 101 Fla. 320.

(3) Where it appears prima facie from the entire record presented in an application for certiorari that plaintiff's negligence in a substantial manner contributed approximately to the injury for which damages were adjudged against defendant in the civil court of record, and judgment has been affirmed on appeal by the circuit court, and the case is one which under the law contributory negligence bars recovery, the supreme court may in its discretion issue a writ of certiorari to have the entire record brought up for review, since it appears prima facie that the lower courts did not observe the essential requirements of the law.—American Ry. Express Co. v. Weatherford, 93 So. 740, 84 Fla. 264.

Certiorari is proper, but not exclusive, remedy to correct an error in a decision of a court of ordinary.—Pierce v. Felts, 92 S.E. 541, 146 Ga. 309.

Erroneous direction of verdict

A person against whom verdict was directed having the right to insist by motion for new trial that the verdict was erroneously directed, may except by certiorari to the overruling of motion.—Hopkins Inv. Co. v. Crawford, 132 S.E. 925, 35 Ga.App. 331.

Erroneous nonsuit

Where plaintiff's evidence, as shown by the answer to the writ of certiorari, was sufficient to have carried the case to the jury, it was not error for superior court to sustain the certiorari, after a nonsuit, and to remand the case for a new trial.—Turner v. Torphy, 100 S.E. 644, 24 Ga.App. 222.

Judgment not warranted by evidence

(1) Where the petition for certiorari and the answer thereto showed that defendant admitted buying and receiving books, signing written contract for their purchase and failing to pay the price, certiorari to a judgment for defendant was properly sustained.—Kendrick v. Bureau of Nat. Literature, 94 S.E. 267, 21 Ga. App. 174.

(2) Where plaintiff's evidence was insufficient to establish prescriptive right to way and defendant's evidence established contrary, judge of superior court erred in refusing to sanction certiorari, wherein finding for plaintiff was alleged to be contrary to law and evidence.—Hendricks v. Carter, 94 S.E. 807, 21 Ga. App. 527.

Refusal of new trial

Certiorari may be employed to review a judgment refusing to grant a new trial.—Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Willie, 133 S.E. 44, 35 Ga. App. 202.

Certiorari properly overruled

In case of forcible entry and detainer, under Civ.Code 1910 § 5393, where the only issue was properly submitted to the jury, and there was evidence to authorize the verdict, it was not error for judge of superior court to overrule petition for certiorari.—Sikes v. Edwards, 95 S.E. 378, 22 Ga.App. 53.

No consolidation with equity petition

There being an adequate remedy at law by petition for certiorari for the correction of errors committed on the trial of a case in the city court of Pelham, such a pending petition could not be consolidated with a petition in equity to set the verdict aside for mistake.—*Gulf Refining Co. v. sofar as such errors constitute illegalities, abuses, or failure to follow legal procedure in those jurisdictions, see supra subdivision a of this section, where such matters as well as jurisdictional errors constitute good grounds for the issuance of the writ, and with the further exception of jurisdictions wherein the scope of review by certiorari is exceedingly broad. The foregoing rule does not apply, however, where the question involved is whether the court has legal authority to determine the matter before it.⁴⁰

§ 25. Proceedings Absolutely Void

The decisions are inharmonious as to whether the writ will lie for proceedings or determinations which are absolutely void.

The question whether certiorari lies to review void proceedings or determinations has been variously decided in the different states.⁴¹ In some jurisdictions, this writ can be resorted to only when proceedings are absolutely null and void.⁴² In other jurisdictions the doctrine appears to be that, although a reversal of void proceedings or determinations by certiorari is not really essential, yet since it is one of the main purposes of the writ to keep inferior tribunals within the bounds of their jurisdiction, the writ will be granted as being the safer course.⁴³ The fact that a void judgment might have been vacated and set aside on appeal has been held not to preclude the allowance of certiorari to quash it.⁴⁴ Since a judgment is not void if the court has jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject matter irrespective of whether the complaint states a cause of action or not, so long as it apprises defendant of the nature of plaintiff's demand, certiorari will not lie to a judgment as void on its face where a sufficient attempt has been made to state a cause of action.⁴⁵

In some few jurisdictions it has been held that certiorari will not lie to review or correct a void judgment by a court legally constituted⁴⁶ or a judgment or order by persons without authority to exercise judicial power.⁴⁷

§ 26. Procedure Unknown to Common Law

Where other remedies are not provided certiorari will generally lie to review judicial proceedings of inferior courts or tribunals not according to the course of the common law.

It is a general rule of the common law that, when a new jurisdiction is created by statute, and the court or officer exercising it proceeds in a summary way or in a course not according to the common law, and a remedy for the revision of its exercise is not given by the statute creating it, certiorari will lie.⁴⁸ Such review by certiorari not only

No useful purpose served

Where a public body, to whom no judicial functions have been intrusted, has assumed to exercise such function, no review of propriety of its action by courts through certiorari would ordinarily serve any useful purpose, as attempted action of such body without power is void and may be attacked for want of jurisdiction at any time when attempt is made to enforce claims founded on such action. Judgment for attorney's fees

Judgment of district court for one applies to jurisdiction to act,⁴⁹ but to excess of jurisdiction as well;⁵⁰ and it also extends to the manner in which the jurisdiction has been exercised when questions of law are involved,⁵¹ and to the ascertainment of whether the tribunal which made a determination of fact acted on any evidence which would warrant the conclusion reached.⁵² So, it has been held that certiorari will lie to tribunals which are called extra-ordinary and special in contradistinction to the ordinary and common courts established for the trial of criminal offenses and the determination of private rights.⁵³

Conversely, certiorari does not lie to review the decision of a court of record proceeding according to the course of the common law, since in such cases a review may be obtained by a writ of error or other adequate means.⁵⁴ Moreover, the mere enlargement or extension of the judicial powers of a court does not make the exercise of such powers subject to review by certiorari.⁵⁵

The general rule has been applied to proceedings under various attachment statutes,⁵⁶ to appeals in nisi prius courts from determinations of state moving picture censors,⁵⁷ to special discovery proceedings,⁵⁸ to proceedings to compel the delivery of the books and papers of a public officer to his successor,⁵⁹ to proceedings for trial of right to a garage keeper's lien,⁶⁰ and also to proceedings under landlord and tenant acts.⁶¹

Change of nature of proceedings. The fact that proceedings in their inception are summary in their character and unknown to the common law does not authorize certiorari after an appeal to a higher court whereby the proceedings become according to the course of the common law so as to be reviewable by a writ of error.⁶² It seems also that, although the proceedings in their inception or early state are not in accordance with the ordinary form of the common law, nevertheless the subsequent steps may be in the ordinary common-law form, so as to be reviewable by writ of error and, therefore, to preclude a certiorari.⁶³

§ 27. Anticipated Wrong

Certiorari does not lie to prevent anticipated wrongs or injuries.

The office of certiorari is in no sense that of a restraining order, see supra § 4 c. Thus, the writ will not lie to prevent anticipated wrong or injury.⁶⁴ As shown supra § 23, it cannot be used to prevent a threatened excess of jurisdiction.

§ 28. Right to Office

- a. In general
- b. Appointment
- c. Removal, suspension, and reinstatement

a. In General

Ordinarily, certiorari will not lie where its only object is to determine the right to office.

Although there is authority to the contrary,⁶⁵ it appears to be the general rule that certiorari will not lie to try title to office, or where the determination of the right to office is the obvious and only object of the writ;⁶⁶ and this is so even though the parties to the writ consent.⁶⁷ In such cases, quo warranto is the proper remedy.

This rule is limited in one jurisdiction, however, by decisions which hold that collateral questions involving the legality of an election to office may be raised and determined in testing the validity of laws or resolutions adverse to the parties' rights.⁶⁸ Furthermore, it is the rule in that same jurisdiction that a public officer in full possession of his office may maintain certiorari to remove from his way a proceeding which he apprehends may be used unlawfully to eject him or disturb him in the tenure of his office.⁶⁹

Possession de jure et de facto required

(1) Certiorari to review the legality of corporate action in declaring office vacant and electing successor lies only if the prosecutor is in office de jure and de facto.—Randolph v. City of Rahway, 148 A. 793, 106 N.J.Law 296.

(2) Where another person not party to certiorari proceeding was occupying office, certiorari will not lie to determine validity of discharge of prosecutor, an exempt fireman.—Kidd v. Grier, 161 A. 49, 10 N.J.Misc. 866.

Sheriff's order discharging one

b. Appointment

Ordinarily, the validity of an appointment to an office is not reviewable by the writ.

The validity of an "appointment" of an officer does not ordinarily involve judicial action and hence is not reviewable by certiorari,⁷⁰ although when regarded as a judicial act it has been held that the writ might issue.⁷¹

c. Removal, Suspension, and Reinstatement

As a rule it is only where the removal of an officer is a judicial act that it is reviewable by the writ.

Where the removal of a public officer or employee is considered to be a judicial act, as is generally the case as to removals for cause after a hearing, it is reviewable by certiorari.⁷² Where, however, the

from the office of court attendant, to which he was appointed pursuant to Pub.L.1916 p 514, being a proceeding which such officer may apprehend will be unlawfully used to disturb him in his office, is reviewable by certiorari, since if the sheriff has no power to remove him, then the order doing so is a proceeding which the prosecutor may apprehend will be used unlawfully to disturb him and is thus reviewable by certiorari.—Howley v. Wyckoff, 114 A. 536, 96 N.J.Law 288.

Resolution impeding performance of duty

Certiorari, and not quo warranto, against a county board of elections is the appropriate remedy for a district election officer to remove an alleged illegal resolution of the board appointing to an office another in place of the prosecutor and thus impeding him in the performance of his public duty.—Hartley v. County Board of Elections of Passaic County, 107 A. 817, 93 N.J.Law 313.

Appointment by court

The legality of the appointment by a court of members of a teachers' board has been held not reviewable by certiorari on the theory that it was not a judicial proceeding.—State v. Harrison, 41 S.W. 971, 43 S.W. 867, 141 Mo. 12.

Fla.—Sirmans v. Owen, 100 So. 734, 87 Fla. 485.

As has been seen supra § 18 a, certiorari will not lie to correct a purely ministerial act, even though the performance thereof involves discretion.

Applications of rules. The principles heretofore stated in this section have been applied to acts of inferior courts involving discretion, such as the allowance or refusal of amendments;⁹⁴ the admission of attorneys to the bar;⁹⁵ decisions on motions for bills of particulars;⁹⁶ determination of the fitness of a guardian;⁹⁷ direction of a remittitur;⁹⁸ dismissal of an appeal;⁹⁹ granting or refusal of bail;¹ granting or refusing an injunction,² or fixing the amount of the bond therein;³ granting or refusal to grant a new trial;⁴ granting or refusing to vacate a judgment;⁵ requiring the production of books, papers, or documents;⁶ and the setting aside of a verdict.⁷ In like manner, the writ has not been allowed to review discretionary acts or inferior boards or tribunals as, for example, in the allowance or revocation of licenses.⁸

Only for illegality or excess of jurisdiction

Where, under the controlling statute, it is discretionary with the court to order the production of material, books, and papers, insofar as the court confines its ruling within the discretion allowed by the statute certiorari will not lie, but if the order goes beyond such discretion and thereby becomes illegal, or if the court exceeds its jurisdiction the writ will lie to review such act.—Dunlop v. District Court of Greene County, 239 N.W. 541, 214 Iowa 389—Stagg v. First Nat. Bank, 212 N.W. 342, 203 Iowa 84—Davis v. District Court in and for Allamakee County, 192 N.W. 852, 195 Iowa 688.

§ 31. Matters Subsequent to Judgment

The writ will not ordinarily issue to review matters arising subsequent to the judgment, but when employed in lieu of audita querela this may be done.

Matters arising subsequently to judgment, which afford no ground of objection to its correctness at the time of its rendition, ordinarily furnish no ground for the writ;⁹ but it is otherwise where good grounds of objection were unknown until after judgment.¹⁰

As shown supra § 2 b (4), the writ is sometimes used in the place of an audita querela, to give relief to a party against whom a judgment has been rendered, for causes which have originated since the rendition thereof, such as the issuance of an execution on a judgment wholly or partly satisfied.¹¹ When so employed the writ will not lie to a matter which arose prior to the judgment.¹²

§ 32. Abstract Questions

Certiorari will not lie to review abstract, academic, moot, or dead questions.

After affirmation of justice judgment

It has been held that defendant, who has clearly recognized a provisional seizure of chattels on leased premises to satisfy the lessor's lien, is not entitled to certiorari where his contention that certain of the chattels were not seized was not made until after the district court, on appeal from the justice court, had held that the chattels had been seized and were subject to the lessor's lien and privilege.—Beale v. Martin, 160 So. 305, 181 La. 703.

12. Tenn.—Baker v. Penecost, 106 S.W.2d 220, 171 Tenn. 529.

Certiorari will not lie where there is nothing for it to review, as where the subject matter of the litigation has never existed or has ceased to exist and there is nothing on which a judgment of the reviewing court can operate.¹³ To justify the issuance of the writ, it must appear that the matter sought to be reviewed has at least some semblance of vitality, that is, as long as it stands it affects some right or interest of the party applying for the writ.¹⁴ The writ will not issue merely to give an opportunity to determine abstract, academic, hypothetical, or moot questions,¹⁵ even though such a determination would be of public interest.¹⁶ Accordingly, a judgment or order suspending¹⁷ or removing¹⁸ a person from public office will not be reviewed by certiorari after the expiration of the tenure or term of such officer, nor will the writ issue to review an order which has expired by its own terms,¹⁹ or which has been annulled by the court which made it.²⁰ Likewise, the writ does not lie to review the sentence of a court-martial reprimand-

ing an officer, after the reprimand has been administered, the court dissolved, and the sentence fully executed, the controversy having ceased to exist.²¹

The writ will not issue where it would not be beneficial or would be inadequate for the purpose for which it is sought, see supra § 12.

In deciding that the writ will not issue in a particular case, the court will not anticipate in what cases exceptional facts may call for its use.²²

Settlement. Where the subject matter of the litigation has been fully settled and adjusted so that the order sought to be reviewed is immaterial and abstract, certiorari will not issue.²³

§ 33. New or Difficult Questions

The writ has been allowed to determine new and important questions but this practice is not universal.

While in some cases the court has declined to grant the writ on the ground that new or difficult questions of law are involved,²⁴ in others it has issued for those reasons.²⁵

§ 34. Matters Not Appearing from Record

Common-law certiorari will not lie to review defects not appearing from the record.

Since the scope of the review under common-law certiorari is confined to the record, as is discussed infra § 157, it follows that the writ does not lie for the purpose of reviewing defects not appearing on the face of the record.²⁶ Conversely, certiorari is a proper remedy, and a speedy one, where it appears on the face of the record that the inferior court, board, or officer has proceeded without, or in excess of, its authority.²⁷ Errors committed in the admission of evidence which do not appear on the record, are not ordinarily reviewable.²⁸ It has been held that, if a judgment is rendered by one who is neither a de jure nor a de facto officer nor judge, the writ is properly denied on the theory that there is no record to review.²⁹

Certiorari is not intended to reach cases where the record may not speak the truth or where fraud or unlawful means were practiced in obtaining the judgment.³⁰

§ 35. Prior Adjudication

A prior adjudication will bar a review of the same matter by certiorari.

Reason for rule

It is important that the appellate court which has the power to establish precedents binding on other courts should at the first opportunity determine a new and appropriate question so as to avoid any conflict between state and federal statutes. While applications for certiorari for this purpose is not to be regarded as merely a perfunctory proceeding, still where there is any doubt as to the correctness of the decision the writ should be granted that the whole question may be maturely considered and decided on full argument.—Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Yesbik, 91 S.E. 873, 146 Ga. 620, certiorari granted 91 S.E. 274, 19 Ga.App. 252, affirmed 92 S.E. 527, 146 Ga. 769.

The writ will not issue where it appears that the same questions were previously submitted and adjudicated by a prior writ of certiorari to which the petitioner was a party,³¹ or on an appeal taken by him.³² An application for certiorari and prohibition will not be favorably entertained if it appears that the relator had himself previously submitted to the court the question of the illegality of the action he resists, by means of an injunction.³³ However, an adverse judgment on a rule to dissolve an injunction does not prejudice applicant's right to relief on his application to a higher court for a writ of certiorari and prohibition, since the first application is a prerequisite to his application to the higher court.³⁴

a. Issuance Because of Want of Other Remedy

The absence of another adequate remedy is a ground for the issuance of certiorari in an otherwise proper case.

In the absence of a statute which provides otherwise, certiorari will lie where no other adequate remedy exists.³⁵ Of course, this does not mean that certiorari will lie merely because there is no other adequate or speedy remedy by which to review the proceedings, where it is otherwise not a proper case for the writ, as where the proceedings are not judicial in their nature.³⁶ Thus, subject to such limitation, the writ will lie when there is no adequate remedy by appeal³⁷ or writ of er-

Organization proceedings of school district

The proceedings for the organization of a school district may be attacked for excess of jurisdiction or for illegality by the common-law writ of certiorari because no appeal or other mode of review is provided.—People v. Hartquist, 142 N.E. 475, 311 Ill. 127—Fisher v. McIntosh, 115 N.E. 529, 277 Ill. 432.

Illegal order as to depositions

(1) Certiorari was proper to test legality of order to take depositions of defendants in equity case during term where order was not limited to matters necessary to petitioner's cause of action, since remedy by appeal was neither speedy nor adequate.—Bagley v. District Court in and for Cerro Gordo County, 254 N. W. 26, 218 Iowa 34.

(2) Certiorari would be granted to plaintiff, where trial court had erroneously issued order, the effect of which was to suspend any further proceedings until plaintiff submitted himself for purpose of having his deposition taken, although plaintiff had not been subpoenaed by defendant, since court did not regularly pursue authority conferred on it and plaintiff was without any remedy unless granted writ of certiorari, but would be required either to submit to order or cease prosecution of action.—Olson v. Unauthorized appeal retained as certiorari

Where appeal was required to be dismissed because statute failed to afford that remedy, parties acquiesced, and question presented was of public interest, supreme court, of its own motion, retained cause as if presented on certiorari by which appellant was entitled to review.—Jackling v. State Tax Commission, 58 P.2d 1167, 40 N.M. 241.

Appeal limited to "aggrieved party"

(1) One whose rights were adversely adjudicated by interlocutory judgment, but in whose favor final decree was rendered could maintain certiorari where under the statute only the aggrieved party may appeal.—Ruddell v. Sixth Judicial Dist. Court in and for Humboldt County, 17 P.2d 693, 54 Nev. 363.

(2) Rev.L.1912 § 5327, making an appeal available only to an aggrieved party, did not provide a remedy for defendant over whom court had not acquired jurisdiction by service

ror,³⁸ or otherwise.³⁹ For instance, where the statute provides no means for review of a final order, certiorari will lie.⁴⁰ Likewise, the inability to obtain adequate relief in equity may be ground.⁴¹ Furthermore, whenever there is no direct remedy provided for review, the writ of certiorari lies, even though some other remedy can be conceived as possible in the future.⁴²

Where in a statutory proceeding the legislature fails to provide for an appeal and the action of the tribunal is considered to be final for that reason, certiorari to inspect the record may issue.⁴³ However, in some jurisdictions, where the legislature particularly states that no appeal shall be permitted, then the writ will not lie except for jurisdictional questions.⁴⁴

b. Denial Because of Other Remedy

(1) In general

(2) Limitations and exceptions to rule

(1) In General

Certiorari will not as a rule issue if there is another adequate remedy available.

As a general rule the writ of certiorari will not issue if there is another adequate remedy available to petitioner.⁴⁵ The rule is not without important of process or appearance, upon court's denial of his motion to quash service of summons.—State v. Second Judicial Dist. Court in and for Washoe County, 226 P. 1106, 48 Nev. 53.

Special acts not in ordinary course exceptions, at least in some jurisdictions, as is shown in subdivision b (2) of this section.

Applications of rule. The general rule just stated precludes the granting of the writ, ordinarily, where another remedy is expressly provided by statute,⁴⁶ or where there is an adequate remedy by an action at law or in equity,⁴⁷ or by a defense in an action at law⁴⁸ or in equity,⁴⁹ or an adequate and more proper remedy by writ of habeas corpus,⁵⁰ injunction,⁵¹ mandamus,⁵² quo warranto,⁵³ or supersedeas.⁵⁴

(2) Limitations and Exceptions to Rule

Notwithstanding the existence of another remedy, certiorari may issue to prevent a failure of justice and in other cases within the discretion of the court where not restrained by statute. Another remedy which is merely concurrent or cumulative or is inadequate will not preclude a resort to certiorari. Further, in some states, although not in all, want or excess of jurisdiction or illegality may be reviewed by certiorari although there is another remedy available.

It has been broadly stated that an exception to the rule that the writ will not lie where there is another and adequate remedy, exists where its allowance is necessary to prevent a failure of justice.⁵⁵ It has also been held that the rule requiring the exhaustion of statutory remedies before the writ will be granted is a rule of policy, convenience, and discretion rather than a rule of law.⁵⁶ Thus the issuance of certiorari being within the discretion of the court empowered to issue it and to whom application is made, see supra § 10, it may not only be dismissed whenever another remedy is available, see supra subdivision b (1) of this section, but, in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, the court may in the exercise of its sound discretion pass upon the questions submitted to it.⁵⁷ On the other hand, where it is provided by statute that certiorari will not lie where an appeal or other adequate remedy exists, the writ will not lie where such is the case.⁵⁸

Where the only limitation on the scope of certiorari to test the judgment of inferior tribunals is that there shall be some other mode of review by a particular court, a method of review by some other governmental agency therefor does not exclude the certiorari jurisdiction of that court.⁵⁹

Remedy inadequate. Where the other available remedy is inadequate, and more expeditious and efficient relief can be afforded by certiorari, the writ may be granted, although another mode of redress is available.⁶⁰ This rule is specially applicable where the tribunal below was apparently without jurisdiction, or where errors or abuses going to the jurisdiction are complained of.⁶¹

An adequate remedy has been defined as "a remedy which is equally beneficial, speedy and sufficient, not merely a remedy which at some time in the future will bring about a revival of the judgment of the lower court complained of in the certiorari proceeding, but a remedy which will promptly relieve the petitioner from the injurious effects of that judgment and the acts of the inferior court or tribunal."⁶²

Remedy concurrent or cumulative. Certiorari will not be denied, where another available remedy is concurrent with that of certiorari, or cumulative thereto,⁶³ and for this reason the party aggrieved

Appeal, injunction, or certiorari available

Where order of board of county commissioners vacating and closing a highway, was void for noncompliance with Remington Comp.Stat. §§ 6503-6506, persons seeking to attack such proceedings, who are not record parties, but would be affected by vacation of highway, although they might have appealed under § 4076, may wait until their rights are actually invaded, in which case they would have recourse to either extraordinary writ of certiorari or extraordinary process of injunction, and where latter remedy pursued court will not hold that former should have been invoked.—Elsensohn v. Garfield County, 231 P. 799, 133 Wash. 229.

Under Civil Pract. Act art 77, writs of certiorari and habeas corpus to inquire into the cause of detention of persons in custody may be issued in the alternative to meet the will not necessarily be precluded, because he may have a remedy by action,⁶⁴ although, where the party has an opportunity to litigate the question in an action,⁶⁵ or another adequate remedy exists, the court as a rule is reluctant to grant the writ, or at least will exercise great caution in so doing.⁶⁶

Jurisdictional errors and illegality. The general rule that the existence of another adequate remedy will preclude the issuance of certiorari has been held, in many states, to apply without exception to cases involving a want or excess of jurisdiction on the part of the inferior court or tribunal where an adequate appeal or writ of error⁶⁷ or other adequate remedy⁶⁸ is available to petitioner. On the other hand, the general rule is modified in some states to permit the writ to issue where there is a want or excess of jurisdiction even though an appeal⁶⁹ or other review⁷⁰ lies. This rule may well be based on the theory that in a case involving want or excess of jurisdiction it is doubtful whether the remedy by appeal is ever adequate.⁷¹ Furthermore it has been held that where the trial court has no jurisdiction⁷² or has exceeded its jurisdiction⁷³ the remedies by appeal and certiorari are concurrent.

In some jurisdictions where illegality⁷⁴ or erroneous exercise of functions⁷⁵ are placed on the same plane as excess of jurisdiction the writ will situation of the relator, and in some cases either may be resorted to after the failure of the other to accomplish the desired end.—People ex rel. Semenoff v. Nagle, 194 N.Y.S. 602, 118 Misc. 476.

Intermediate appellate court

In ordinary cases an appellee should have sought a review by the supreme court of the overruling of a motion in the court of appeals to dismiss the appeal; but as the question involved goes to the jurisdiction of the court of appeals the supreme court must consider such matter on certiorari by the appellant to review the subsequent judgment in the appellate court.—*City of Birmingham v. issue on such grounds despite the availability of an appeal.

§ 38. Remedy by Application in Original Proceeding

It appears to be the general rule that if the relief sought is obtainable by application in the court or tribunal of the original proceeding, and it has not been availed of, certiorari will not lie.

If the petitioner for the writ could have obtained the relief sought by an application to the court or tribunal in the original proceeding, but he has failed to make such an application, the writ does not lie.⁷⁶ Moreover a party is not entitled to the writ if he fails to exercise diligence in protecting his interests in the action or proceeding in question.⁷⁷ Thus the writ does not lie to review a judgment where no motion to set it aside or to quash it has been made,⁷⁸ nor to vacate an order which might be corrected by amendment in the lower court or tribunal.⁷⁹ Certiorari is not the proper remedy against a judgment or decree procured on false and fraudulent testimony, see supra § 34, a motion for a new trial being appropriate.⁸⁰ If, however, it is the absolute and imperative duty of the court below to take the action charged to have been neglected, it is not necessary that a formal application should have been made.⁸¹ The writ does not lie to set aside a proceeding by an incorporated political body, for alleged irregularity, until the remedy within the organization is exhausted.⁸² Where a motion to dismiss a pending appeal from a layout of a highway underpass on the ground of the selectmen's lack of authority to make it may properly be made, certiorari will not lie.⁸³

An exception to the rule set out at the beginning of this section is to the effect that a person with a clear right to make a direct attack on a judgment or order of a judicial tribunal on the ground of lack of jurisdiction is not required first to seek relief from such judgment or order in the court which was without jurisdiction to make it.⁸⁴

In a jurisdiction where the scope of the writ is very broad, the right of certiorari may be exercised without moving for a new trial.⁸⁵

Consent judgment. It has been held that the writ of certiorari cannot be granted to review a judgment by consent, the apparent remedy being by motion to set aside the judgment and, if the motion is denied, a review of such denial by appeal or certiorari.⁸⁶

Rehearing. The failure to apply for a rehearing may bar the writ,⁸⁷ but a second application for a rehearing need not be made.⁸⁸

Remedy by jury trial

Where district court had jurisdiction of case wherein the attorneys for the parties orally agreed in open court on a statement of facts sufficient to enable the court to apply the law, the action of the court in rendering its decision in such case on the day appointed was legal, and not subject to review by writ of certiorari, since party, aggrieved by decision had privilege of claiming a

ror,⁹⁰ or exceptions.⁹¹

Exceptions and limitations. The exceptions heretofore considered, see supra § 37 b (2), to the rule that certiorari will not lie where another adequate remedy is available are in general applicable to the rule now under consideration. Thus, where, as is the case in some states, the remedy by appeal and that by certiorari are in certain cases concurrent or cumulative, a party may have certiorari, although he also has a remedy by appeal.⁹² The availability of certiorari in some jurisdictions, where the writ is sought on the ground of want or excess of jurisdiction or illegality despite the existence of a right of appeal, is discussed supra § 37, b, (2). Some jurisdictions, following a policy of enlarging rather than restricting the functions of the writ, consider that the fact that the determination sought to be reviewed is appealable will not necessarily preclude the issuance of certiorari,⁹³ especially where the time within which an appeal must be taken has lapsed.⁹⁴

b. Adequacy of Appeal

another remedy is not a bar unless it is an adequate remedy. Unless otherwise provided by statute this rule applies where there is another remedy by appeal or writ of error, but it is not an adequate remedy.⁹⁵

In some states the statute provides that certiorari or a writ of review may be granted in certain cases where there is no appeal, nor any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy. Under such a statute and those containing language substantially the same, it seems to be the general rule that the remedy by appeal must be adequate if it is to preclude certiorari,⁹⁶ and it would appear that the appeal must also be plain⁹⁷ and speedy.⁹⁸ On the other hand, the courts of some jurisdictions have construed the statute more literally and hold that the mere fact that an order or judgment is appealable is determinative and the fact that the appeal does not afford a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy is immaterial.⁹⁹

Matters determining adequacy. The peculiar circumstances of the particular case may be considered as bearing on the question of the adequacy of the remedy by appeal.¹ It has been held that where one litigant has the opportunity to decide whether an appeal from a judgment in his favor will be adequate and is at liberty to pursue a course of conduct which might result in great injustice to the other before the latter's rights are determined, such remedy is inadequate and certiorari is available to the other litigant to review the judgment.² It is not necessary that the appeal be as advantageous or adequate in all particulars as the writ of certio-

Notwithstanding the seeming purport of the language of the statute, providing that it must appear "that there is no appeal, nor in the judgment of the court any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law," it does not contemplate that the writ will issue only where there is no appeal, for it is clearly the rule that the writ may issue if the appeal is inadequate.—State v. rari.³ The fact that an appeal will not lie directly from an order is not ordinarily considered to be a sufficient basis for the writ, where the party aggrieved has a remedy to review the order by an appeal from a final judgment in the case, unless such remedy is otherwise inadequate,⁴ although there is authority to the contrary.⁵ Similarly, where the effect of a decree modifying a prior decree and referring the case to a master is to leave the cause subject to future orders and decrees of the court, certiorari will not lie to quash the modifying decree, since if deemed aggrieved by the final decree to be rendered petitioner may appeal therefrom.⁶ Where despite the fact that an order may be reviewed on appeal from final judgment, there is nevertheless no adequate remedy by appeal because of exceptional circumstances, or the probability of irreparable harm, the writ will lie to review such order.⁷ Such a case is made where a party, in order to appeal, must first submit to an adverse judgment which will fix his status as a person of unsound mind, and which could not be superseded by bond or otherwise, and would deprive him of dominion of his property, and render it doubtful whether the proceeding could be reviewed at all if his death should occur before such review could be had.⁸ It has also been held that an appeal from a final judgment is not an adequate remedy for the denial of a change of venue to which defendant was entitled.⁹

Certiorari as more expeditious. Ordinarily, the writ will not lie merely because the remedy by appeal is less prompt than by certiorari,¹⁰ and this is true even under a statute providing that the writ will lie only where there is no plain, adequate, or speedy remedy.¹¹ Thus, a delay caused by following the regular course of review by appeal will not alone warrant the allowance of the writ.¹² Such delay, however, when added to other reasons may bear considerable weight.¹³ Thus, the courts have allowed the writ where the delay incidental to an appeal would deprive appellant of a substantial right.¹⁴

Ordinarily, a remedy by appeal is inadequate where the appeal cannot be heard in time to be of any avail.¹⁵ Thus, where a judgment involving an election cannot be heard on appeal until after the election day,¹⁶ or where in an action to determine the right to an office an appeal could probably not be determined before the time for which the office is claimed would expire,¹⁷ the appeals are inadequate.

As more convenient or less expensive. Certiorari will not lie merely because of the inconveniences and annoyances incidental to an appeal.¹⁸ Similarly, the writ will not lie merely because it may be less expensive than an appeal,¹⁹ or because the expense of an appeal will be heavy and disproportionate to the recovery.²⁰ So, the fact that the profits of a business will have to go to pay the expenses of a receivership if an appeal is taken is not sufficient to make an appeal inadequate, especially if the corpus of the property is not depreciated, and if the status quo of the parties is not changed. In other words, the fact that if an appeal is taken a business will lose profits is not such a circumstance as to warrant the issuing of the writ.²¹ It has been held, however, that where petitioner does not have funds sufficient to prosecute an appeal that remedy may, under certain circumstances, be considered to be inadequate.²²

§ 40. Loss of Appeal or Other Remedy

A litigant who has lost the right to appeal or has failed to perfect an appeal by no fault of his own may, in a proper case, obtain a review by certiorari.

The mere fact that a litigant has not appealed or has lost his right to appeal, as by negligently suffering the time to elapse within which an appeal might have been taken or a writ of error sued out, or has disregarded any other remedy to which he was entitled, where such neglect is not sufficiently excused,²³ or has inexcusably failed seasonably to perfect an appeal taken,²⁴ as by neglecting to furnish the security required by statute,²⁵ will not, as a rule, warrant the issuance of certiorari. This rule is apparently inapplicable in those states wherein the availability of an appeal will not preclude the issuance of certiorari, at least in so far as mere loss of the right to appeal by lapse of time for appeal is concerned.²⁶

It seems to be the general rule that in a proper case a party entitled to appeal or to pursue some other remedy, who has lost the right through inadvertence, accident, or mistake, may have a remedy by certiorari,²⁷ provided there is a showing of probable merits and freedom from fault.²⁸ The sufficiency of this excuse for failure to appeal in the regular way and permission for the petitioner to resort to the extraordinary rests more or less in the judicial discretion of the court.²⁹ Thus, the excuses of absence from the place of trial,³⁰ and ignorance of the time and place of trial,³¹ are to be determined by the peculiar circumstances of the particular case, and it would seem no settled rule can be laid down other than the fact that the court will not ordinarily deny the writ where a party would thus be deprived of substantial justice and remain without remedy.

Where a party has a remedy by a proceeding in chancery for the loss of his right of appeal by fraud, accident, or mistake and without fault on his part, he must seek relief there rather than by certiorari in a court with no original jurisdiction.³²

Loss of remedy by abolition of court. Where after judgment has been rendered in an inferior court such court is abolished by statute, thus cutting off review by writ of error from a superior court, certiorari has been held to lie to reach errors in the inferior court showing that it failed to proceed according to the essential requirements of law.³³

Loss through act of judge or court functionaries. Certiorari will lie where appellant is deprived of the benefits of an appeal duly taken, because of some error or act on the part of the judge or court officers,³⁴ and in some jurisdictions it would seem that this is the only exception where a party has failed to perfect an appeal taken.³⁵ Thus, where defendant fails to perfect his appeal because of a delay on the part of the judge in settling the case on appeal,³⁶ or because of his omission so to do³⁷ on account of his retirement from office before such settlement,³⁸ or because the case as made up by him does not correctly set forth the ground of exceptions,³⁹ he is entitled to proceed by certiorari as a substitute for the lost right; and, except where the clerk has acted as the agent of appellant in the premises,⁴⁰ he will have the like right where he has sustained the loss of his remedy by appeal by reason of the negligence of the clerk in the performance of his official duties.⁴¹

It has also been held that, where a court permits an application for certiorari to be filed before the time for appeal or other review has expired but makes no order allowing or denying it until after such period has expired, it should, in the exercise of a fair discretion and particularly in a meritorious case, not deny the writ on the ground that petitioner had had a right of appeal.⁴²

Agent's neglect. Petitioner will be held responsible for the neglect of his agent; and when he trusts to another that which he should have done himself, and the trust proves to have been improperly placed, he must abide the consequences, and a certiorari will be denied.⁴³ Thus, error or neglect of counsel, whereby a petitioner fails to appeal, is not ground for certiorari, except under very exceptional circumstances.⁴⁴ Where, however, the attorneys are insolvent, and petitioner has no remedy other than by certiorari, the writ has been held to lie where the neglect relates to acts which the petitioner himself could not do.⁴⁵

Illness or death. Illness or incapacity of appellant of such a character as to prevent him from taking a timely appeal,⁴⁶ or from procuring others so to do,⁴⁷ or from perfecting an appeal taken by him,⁴⁸ or the death of the party intermediate the judgment and the expiration of the time within which an appeal might have been taken,⁴⁹ will ordinarily excuse the failure to pursue that remedy and entitle the party to the writ.

Ignorance of the law causing the loss of an available remedy will not ordinarily warrant the issuance of certiorari.⁵⁰ Still where a party has lost his right to a review by reliance on a statute which had not been challenged in any respect until after the certiorari proceeding was instituted, but which was thereafter held to be unconstitutional, the court may in its discretion issue the writ.⁵¹

Inability to furnish security. Inability to procure or furnish security, accidental⁵² or otherwise,⁵³ as where caused by illness⁵⁴ or poverty,⁵⁵ or a lack of acquaintance with eligible sureties,⁵⁶ has been held sufficient to excuse the omission in this respect.

Misconduct of adverse party. The writ will ordinarily lie if the right has been lost through the fraud, contrivance, or culpable conduct of the adverse party, or where applicant has been misled by such party.⁵⁷ Ordinarily, however, a certiorari will not be granted merely because the petitioner was not notified of the time and place of trial, or that a claim in offset would be filed;⁵⁸ or where, relying on an assurance that the case would be dismissed, he fails to exercise due diligence;⁵⁹ nor will he be entitled to the writ because of the loss of a good defense, by the fault of the adverse party.⁶⁰

§ 41. Recourse to or Pendency of Other Remedy

A resort to, or the pendency of, another proceeding wherein full redress is obtainable will ordinarily preclude the issuance of certiorari.

If the party aggrieved has elected another remedy under which he can obtain full redress he cannot resort to certiorari also,⁶¹ although it would seem that the rule is otherwise where the other remedy is inadequate to afford the relief sought.⁶² Similarly, since the writ will, as a rule, lie only to a final determination, see supra § 20, where the case is still pending in the court below where the error complained of, if any, may be corrected on the final hearing, the writ will not lie. It has also been held that the writ will not lie where a proceeding in equity for the same relief is pending between the identical parties,⁶³ or where a proceeding is pending in chancery which may dispose of the questions sought to be determined by the writ.⁶⁴ On the other hand, it has been held that the pendency of a suit in equity for the same relief,⁶⁵ or the fact that a suit has been instituted but has been dismissed for want of jurisdiction,⁶⁶ will not preclude the issuance of the writ. The right to the writ is not precluded by the institution or pendency of an action to annul a judgment rendered without jurisdiction.⁶⁷ The pendency of an action to cancel municipal aid bonds will not bar the right to review the proceedings by which their issue was authorized,⁶⁸ and a motion for a new trial made in the primary court will not preclude applicant who thereafter voluntarily dismisses it,⁶⁹ but a cause cannot be removed after arbitrators or referees have entered into consideration of the questions involved.⁷⁰ Where one party sues out habeas corpus and the other certiorari, and both writs are returned at the same time, preference will be given to the former.⁷¹

Appeal pending, dismissed, or abandoned. The writ will not be granted when an appeal is pending from the same determination and the questions sought to be reviewed thereon are the same,⁷² even where the remedies are concurrent.⁷³ In some jurisdictions the taking of an ineffectual or inadequate appeal will not defeat the issuance of the writ;⁷⁴ nor will the applicant be precluded by the taking of an appeal which he has not prosecuted.⁷⁵ It has been held, however, that, where a review may be had either by appeal or by certiorari, and the appeal taken is finally dismissed⁷⁶ or dismissed for want of prosecution,⁷⁷ the writ is not available.

The pendency of an appeal to a court from the judgment of a tribunal vacating an office has been held not to affect the right of the ousted officer to bring certiorari to quash the removal and the appointment of his successor, where such tribunal had appointed another for the duration of petitioner's term, notwithstanding such appeal and the stay of proceedings effected by a bond approved by such tribunal.⁷⁸

Denial of inferiority by court

In South Carolina, a court at an early day refused to obey a writ of certiorari when issued by a federal court, on the ground that it was not inferior to the court which issued it.—Washington v. Huger, 1 Desauss. Eq. 360.

tends to all inferior tribunals and officers acting in a judicial capacity, except where it is otherwise provided by statute.⁸⁰ An inferior court, within the meaning of the rule, is one which is under the supervisory or appellate control of another, or one the jurisdiction of which is limited and confined to special subjects or branches of the law.⁸¹ A court may be an inferior court, notwithstanding it is a court of record.⁸² Although the remedy by common-law certiorari only extends to courts or boards required by law to keep a record or quasi record of their proceedings,⁸³ the writ is not confined to a review of proceedings of courts of record as distinguished from other courts.⁸⁴ Certiorari does not lie between courts of concurrent jurisdiction,⁸⁵ nor to courts having final jurisdiction on the matter involved in the proceeding.⁸⁶

Arbitrators. Since the use of certiorari is limited in application to inferior courts, boards, and tribunals created by law, a writ will not lie to remove the proceedings of arbitrators.⁸⁷

Nonexistent tribunals. Certiorari will not lie to a tribunal which has gone out of existence.⁸⁸ It has also been held that a constitutional provision empowering a superior court to correct errors in inferior judicatories of a permanent nature by writ of certiorari has no application to the proceedings of a court called together for a temporary purpose, and existing only for the time of the trial.⁸⁹

§ 43. Chancery Courts

As a general rule, certiorari does not lie to review chancery proceedings.

Although in some jurisdictions a writ of certiorari properly lies to a court of chancery,⁹⁰ the writ does not, as a general rule, lie to review proceedings in a court of equity, under the reasoning that this is not to be deemed an inferior court which is not proceeding according to the course of the common law, within the rule allowing the writ.⁹¹

§ 44. Particular Courts or Judges

The particular courts and judges to which certiorari will lie, generally, include all inferior courts or bodies exercising a judicial function.

Circuit or district courts are inferior to supreme courts, so as to be reviewable by certiorari.⁹² So, also, the writ lies to a county court⁹³ or judge,⁹⁴ and such a county court is inferior as well to a circuit court.⁹⁵ Certiorari also lies to city courts,⁹⁶ courts of common pleas,⁹⁷ recorders' courts,⁹⁸ juvenile courts,⁹⁹ court commissioners,¹ and other in-

In Rhode Island, it has been held that, while a common-law certiorari will not lie to review proceedings in a court of equity, yet, in as much as the supreme court is not simply a court of common law, but has revisory jurisdiction on all questions of law and equity, and general supervision of "all" courts of inferior jurisdiction, its writ of certiorari to the superior court sitting in equity does not issue as a common-law writ, but as an extraordinary process appropriate to its revisory and supervisory powers.—Hyde v. ferior courts, such as those established in lieu of justices of the peace.² An order of a justice of the supreme court is reviewable on certiorari allowed by the justice himself,³ and the writ lies to a justice of the supreme court to review judicial acts done in vacation.⁴

Certiorari will lie to review the action of inferior tribunals with respect to proceedings concerning insolvents, and poor or fraudulent debtors,⁵ and proceedings on the arrest of an alleged fraudulent debtor, where the record discloses errors reviewable.⁶

§ 45. — Probate and Orphans' Courts

Unless forbidden by statute, certiorari will lie, in a proper case, to review the orders and decrees of probate and orphans' courts and other like tribunals.

Except where expressly forbidden,⁷ certiorari lies to review the orders and decrees of probate and orphans' courts and other like tribunals, on which special jurisdiction has been conferred by statute, in a proper case, the same as the adjudications of other courts not proceeding according to the course of the common law.⁸

Generally, probate courts are "inferior courts" so far as circuit⁹ or district¹⁰ courts are concerned; and the fact that a part of the jurisdiction of a probate court is exempt from circuit court supervision does not prevent the former from being inferior to the circuit court.¹¹ However, in some jurisdictions, probate courts are not inferior to circuit or district courts but are courts of concurrent jurisdiction, so that the writ does not lie from the latter to the former.¹²

The writ does not lie where there is an adequate remedy by appeal or otherwise,¹³ nor where the matter sought to be reviewed rests in the discretion of the probate court;¹⁴ and in some states the writ issues only when the court acts without jurisdiction or in excess of its jurisdiction.¹⁵ In other states, however, it seems that, if no appeal lies, such orders are reviewable on certiorari.¹⁶ In some jurisdictions, it is held that certiorari is a proper but not an exclusive remedy to correct an error in decision by a probate court.¹⁷

The writ also lies, it is held in some jurisdictions, to review an order of a circuit court setting aside an order of a probate court, on the theory that the proceeding is not according to the course of the common law, where the reversal of the order of the circuit court would carry with it the reinstatement of the order of the probate court.¹⁸ So, at least in jurisdictions following this view, certiorari lies to review the judgment of a circuit court affirming the order of a probate court construing a will.¹⁹

§ 46. Particular Board or Officers

In a proper case certiorari will lie to review the acts and orders of various boards or officers.

Certiorari lies, in a proper case, to review the actions of boards of supervisors,²⁰ boards of education,²¹ boards of equalization,²² boards of

IV. WHO MAY INSTITUTE PROCEEDINGS

§ 47. Right Confined to Parties

Generally, certiorari proceedings must be brought by one who was a party to the prior proceedings, but in a proper case may be brought by a person not a party but interested.

As a general rule, persons not parties to the record are not entitled to certiorari,⁶⁴ except perhaps in exceptional cases.⁶⁵ Ordinarily, the remedy of a stranger to the record is to have himself made a party by moving to set aside the judgment or order, and, in case the order is not appealable, he may then resort to certiorari.⁶⁶ As an exception to this rule, it is generally recognized that a person with a personal interest in the subject matter of the proceeding may sue out the writ,⁶⁷ and that a person is interested so as to be entitled to the writ if he is a party in form "or in substance" to the proceeding sought to be reviewed, so as to be concluded by the determination thereof.⁶⁸ A party is one "in substance" where the decision involves special, immediate, and direct injury to his interests.⁶⁹

Interested parties. As examples of persons not parties, but interested, who have been held entitled to the writ, may be mentioned creditors;⁷⁰ an attorney with a lien for services on a judgment in favor of one party;⁷¹ a person against whom a judgment is sought to be enforced;⁷² a person who has been ousted from his job by a decision of a civil service commission;⁷³ heirs or distributees dissatisfied with proceedings in the probate court;⁷⁴ any person interested in an estate which has been disposed of by the administrator under a void order;⁷⁵ the attorney general as representative of the people;⁷⁶ or a tenant in common injured by error of commissioners in partition.⁷⁷

A judge has such an interest in upholding the jurisdiction of his court over questions which the law has intrusted him with that he may resort to certiorari to maintain it.⁷⁸ However, it has been held incompetent for a justice of the peace, whose judicial act is sought to be reviewed or set aside, to sue out certiorari in his own right for the purpose of invalidating a ruling made by a superior court.⁷⁹

Complainant in hearing before state department

Person defrauded by real estate agent, being authorized to call latter to answer before state department and entitled to notice of its proceedings and judgment, is entitled to certiorari.—Scheidecker v.

It has been recognized that in proceedings where there are no formal parties and no appeal or other remedy for excess of jurisdiction, a review on certiorari is allowed to those who are substantially the parties, and who are bound by the proceedings.⁸⁰

§ 49. Parties Entitled, and Who Are Parties

Either party to a proceeding, in a proper case, is entitled to certiorari.

Either party to a proceeding is entitled to the writ in a proper case.⁸¹ Unless the judgment of the inferior tribunal is in favor of applicant in all particulars and to the fullest extent, he is not deprived of his right to the writ because he prevailed in the lower court in some particulars;⁸² but the writ has been denied where applicant therefor prevailed in the inferior court, but sought a review merely for the purpose of compelling his adversary to incur further costs.⁸³

Subject to these general rules, it has been held that certiorari cannot issue in a purely personal proceeding where the person in whose name application is made is dead;⁸⁴ that an intervener has the same right to the writ as the original parties;⁸⁵ that a petitioner for relief is ordinarily considered a party;⁸⁶ that a municipality may bring the proceedings,⁸⁷ if duly authorized;⁸⁸ and that a judge made a party in his official capacity may sue out the writ.⁸⁹

Where the right to certiorari is granted by statute to certain persons in a special proceeding, persons not coming within the statutory permission are not entitled to the writ.⁹⁰

§ 50. Interest and Injury Necessary

In order to be entitled to a writ of certiorari, a petitioner must have an interest in the proceeding to be reviewed and must have sustained injury from the prior ruling therein.

Irrespective of whether the petitioner was a party in the lower court or tribunal, he is not entitled to the writ unless he has an interest in the proceeding sought to be reviewed, and has sustained an injury from the ruling therein.⁹¹ Furthermore, the interest must be a substantial one,⁹² since certiorari issues only at the instance of persons having actual grievances to redress.⁹³ Accordingly, one who has no interest in a controversy or record to be presented has no right to certiorari,⁹⁴ even though he is a party,⁹⁵ and it follows that one who has transferred all his interest is not entitled to the writ,⁹⁶ but an attempted partial assignment is no bar.⁹⁷

Some statutes authorize the writ to be granted to a person or party "beneficially interested," while in other statutes the words "persons aggrieved" are used; but both terms mean practically the same, and apparently do not affect this rule, independent of statute, that only one "interested" and "injured" can apply.⁹⁸

90. Orders of departmental commission

Under a statute providing that an order of a departmental commissioner may be reviewed by a person appearing of record and opposing the making of the order, a petitioner not appearing after notice is not entitled to certiorari.—Beck v. Ten Eyck, 294 N.Y.S. 541, 162 Misc. 5.

Registration commission's appeal from decree of common pleas court directing registration of voter, who had been convicted of intentionally interfering with inspector of registration in performance of his duties by quarter sessions court which failed to impose penalty of disfranchisement, was dismissible since statute does not give commission any standing to prosecute an appeal to an appellate court by certiorari or otherwise.—In re Moskowitz, 196 A. 498, 329 Pa. 133.

Anticipated injury

City solicitor and members of city board of canvassers and registration have been held not entitled to certiorari to prevent mayor, board of aldermen, and common council from considering charges which might result in removing petitioners, and to quash records of respondents relating to proposed hearing, since hearing when held may result in no injury to petitioners.—Messier v. Healey, 175 A. 828, 55 R.I. 1.

Citizen and owner of realty

A resident citizen and owner of realty in the city, in which some of the lines of the railway company run, may prosecute writs of certiorari to review orders of board of public utility commissioners increasing rates of company.—O'Brien v. 98. Party beneficially interested

(1) "Party beneficially interested," under statutes entitling such party to bring certiorari, need not be a party to the proceeding where the court acted without jurisdiction.—

State v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist. in and for Silver Bow County, 19 P.2d 220, 93 Mont. 439.

(2) It has, likewise, been held where the judgment inter partes is not sought to be reviewed.—Burlingame v. Justice's Court of City of Berkeley, 33 P.2d 669, 1 Cal.2d 71.

(3) "Party beneficially interested" is not restricted to one who was original party or made party by order of court.—Electrical Products Corporation v. Second Judicial Dist. Court in and for Washoe County, 23 P.2d 501, 55 Nev. 8.

(4) An order requiring an assignment to plaintiff of a mortgage and subrogating him to rights of the mortgagee is not reviewable on certiorari on the petition of the mortgagor and of mortgagees under a subsequent mortgage.—Hildebrand v. Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco, 159 P. 147, 173 Cal. 86.

(5) Manager of a warehouse for the owner, who brought action for writ of review requiring police judge to certify transcript of record in search warrant proceeding under which three cases of opium were taken from the warehouse, was not a "party beneficially interested."—James v. Police Court of City and County of San Francisco, 178 P. 867, 39 Cal.App. 362.

(6) Other applications see 11 C.J. p 136 note 24 [c].

"Person aggrieved"

(1) Owner of multiple dwellings subject to taxation, having neither intervened nor attempted to intervene in proceedings in which housing board approved housing projects, was not "person aggrieved."—Mt. Hope Development Corporation v. James, 251 N.Y.S. 498, 233 App.Div. 284, affirmed 180 N.E. 252, 258 N.Y. 510.

(2) Where no rights of a petitioner have been finally determined by an action of a common council in de-

As illustrating persons interested and aggrieved may be mentioned the following: An insolvent against whom an order is made to account for certain property;⁹⁹ an administrator ordered to pay out money of the estate;¹ a property owner against whom an appropriation of land is made;² electors and landowners, to review a stock law election;³ the lowest bidder for a municipal contract, to review the award of the contract to another;⁴ a company, to review an order of the public service commission authorizing a rival to issue securities;⁵ and a widow, to review the final settlement of an administrator's account.⁶

Particular applications. An officer may have such an interest as to entitle him to the writ,⁷ but he is not entitled to the writ unless he has such an interest.⁸

A newspaper publisher, it has been held, may review a void designation of a rival paper as the official paper for certain publications,⁹ although under certain circumstances, such as where he might not be designated if the proceedings were set aside, his application may be denied.¹⁰ It has also been held that the action of a board of county supervisors in selecting an official newspaper for the county is not reviewable at the suit of the owner and publisher of a rival newspaper, on the theory that no injury would result unless the compensation allowed would be overcompensation.¹¹

The fact that one is the agent and attorney of the party beneficially interested does not attract to him the beneficial interest of his principal so that he may bring a writ under a statute which provides that the application for the writ must be made by a party beneficially interested.¹²

Taxpayers may be so interested as to be entitled to the writ,¹³ but are not so interested in the action of the common council in seating a member;¹⁴ and the decisions are conflicting where the same injury is sustained by all taxpayers, as will be discussed in the section immediately following.

Grievances of others. Applicant must have grievances of his own, and must not base his right to the writ on the ground that the rights of others have been infringed.¹⁵ Accordingly, corporations are not entitled to the writ for the purpose of redressing injuries to stockholders, and, conversely, individual stockholders are not entitled to the writ in behalf of the corporation.¹⁶

§ 51. Persons Sustaining Injury in Common with Others

Generally, certiorari will not lie to one sustaining an injury in common with the public, unless special injury can be shown, although in some jurisdictions this rule has been modified to allow a review by an individual when the interests of the general public are affected.

It is a general rule that the writ is not available to an individual who has no direct or particular interest in the proceeding sought to be revised and who does not show that he will suffer a special injury beyond that which will affect him in common with the public or others similarly situated,¹⁷ and this rule is especially applicable where another sufclearing vacant the petitioner's position as water commissioner, the petitioner is not "aggrieved" by the determination.—In re Haase, 200 N. Y.S. 419, 206 App.Div. 14, appeal dismissed Haase v. Common Council of City of Elmira, 142 N.E. 320, 236 N. Y. 650.

(3) Under a statute authorizing department of state to hear and try complaints of real estate brokers' fraudulent practices, any victim thereof, permitted to call brokers to account before department, is a party to proceeding with right to certiorari as an aggrieved party.—Scheidecker v. Department of State, 273 N.Y.S. 737, 242 App.Div. 119, amended 275 N.Y.S. 530, 242 App.Div. 891.

By state's attorney

(1) Where a writ of certiorari is ficient remedy through public instrumentalities is available.¹⁸ This general rule has been modified, however, in many jurisdictions, so as to permit the suing out of the writ by persons whose interests are not distinguishable from the interest of the mass of the community, where the matter sought to be reviewed affects the public generally,¹⁹ or where private rights are invaded by persons clothed with authority to act, to prevent or redress public wrongs, especially if the enjoyment of public rights is threatened and public interests will thereby be subserved.²⁰ Certiorari to review the actions of public officials will not lie in New Jersey in favor of prosecutors who have no personal or property interest to be specially and immediately affected by the action complained of,²¹ irrespective of the fact that such officials may have exceeded their power.²²

§ 52. Estoppel

A party may be held to have waived, or be estopped from asserting his right to certiorari by submitting or acquiescing in the jurisdiction, proceedings, or judgment of the court or tribunal.

A party may be estopped to avail himself of the writ, where he has invoked the jurisdiction,²³ has asked in a case which does not involve a private right, and the injury is one affecting the public, it has been held that certiorari must be brought and prosecuted by a state's attorney or the attorney-general.—Heppe v. Mooberry, 183 N.E. 636, 350 Ill. 641.

(2) It has also been held that, on application for prerogative writ of supreme court by the state on relation of private individuals as taxpayers and electors, without first securing consent of attorney general, or his refusal to maintain action in state's behalf, concerning only the state, its sovereignty, franchises, or prerogatives, and where no right of relators or any citizen is immediately threatened, court may refuse to take jurisdiction.—State v. State Board of Canvassers, 172 N.W. 80, 44 N.D. 126.

(3) A private person may bring certiorari if he is one of the members of the public who are injuriously affected by the wrong of which complaint is made.—Heppe v. Mooberry, supra.

(4) Certiorari may be brought by legal voters residing in the territory involved where their rights are injuriously affected by proceedings to detach territory from one school district and attach it to another.—Heppe v. Mooberry, supra.

Petitioners, as citizens, taxpayers, and voters, are proper parties to enforce a public duty of attorney general and secretary of commonwealth in connection with initiative petitions, as provided for in the state constitution.—Horton v. At-

Citizen and taxpayer

(1) Citizens and taxpayers of a municipality have sufficient status and interest to prosecute a review by writ of certiorari of ordinances and resolutions which tend to burden the taxing district with debt.—Cooper v. Town of Belleville, N.J. Sup., 118 A. 332—Biddle v. Riverton, 33 A. 279, 58 N.J.Law 289—State v. Consumer's Water Co., 28 A. 578, 56 N.J.Law 422—State v. Robbins, 25 A. 471, 54 N.J.Law 566—State v. Jersey City, 34 N.J.Law 390.

(2) It has also been held that where prosecutor seeks by certiorari to review, as citizen and taxpayer, an ordinance by the mayor and common council, and his status as such has not been attacked by proofs or other proceedings prior to argument on final hearing, his qualifications are beyond attack.—Jordan v. Borough of Dumont, 143 A. 843, 105 N.J.Law 197, reversing 141 A. 12, 6 N.J.Misc. 311—Lombardo v. Borough of Lodi, 144 A. 123, 7 N.J.Misc. 72—Jackson v. Gloucester City, 141 A. 743, 6 N.J.Misc. 451.

(3) It has, likewise, been held that a citizen has the right to question by direct attack the validity of municipal action which may stand in the way of a prosecution for crime by the federal authorities.—Wilson v. Commissioners of Jersey City, Sup., 107 A. 797, reversed on other grounds Wilson v. Board of Com'rs of Jersey City, 109 A. 364, 94 N.J.Law 119.

Persons held to have special interest

(1) Where prosecutor owned real property on the corner of two streets, and a railroad company having a line of tracks for convenience of adjoining landowners on the sidewalk within a few feet of prosecutor's property proposes to build a similar line on the sidewalk on the other side of the street, thus completely obstructing the approach to prosecutor's property along the sidewalks on both sides except over such tracks.—Seaman v. City of Perth Amboy, 116 A. 22, 97 N.J.Law 76, affirmed 119 A. 278, 98 N.J.Law 174.

(2) Where the surveyors of highways exceeded their jurisdiction, any person interested in the laying of the proposed road.—State v. Hoffmeister, 41 A. 722, 62 N.J.Law 565.

Persons held to have insufficient interest

(1) Abutting property owner seeking review of ordinance permitting manufacturer to maintain spur track in streets.—Altschul v. Jersey City, 151 A. 468, 8 N.J.Misc. 708.

(2) Unsuccessful bidder for city contract.—Home Coal Co. v. Board of Education of City of Bayonne, 174 A. 580, 12 N.J.Misc. 728.

Validity of ordinance affecting general public

(1) Such an ordinance cannot be challenged by certiorari unless the prosecutor shows some injury peculiar to himself.—Wilson v. Borough of Sea Girt, 139 A. 426, 5 N.J.Misc. 1042—11 C.J. p 138 note 46 [c].

(2) Accordingly, a writ of certiorari for the purpose of testing the validity of a city ordinance, requiring a license fee from contractors, cannot be maintained, in the absence of a showing of conviction of the prosecutor for violation thereof.—Wilson v. Borough of Sea Girt, supra.

22. N.J.—Meyer v. City of Perth Amboy, 133 A. 397, 4 N.J.Misc. 464.

23. Ala.—Waltman v. Ortman, 170 So. 545, 233 Ala. 170, second case, denying certiorari 170 So. 545, 27 Ala.App. 269, first case—Foley v. Armstrong, 170 So. 547, 27 Ala.

submitted himself thereto without objection,²⁴ or has acquiesced in,²⁵ or expressly consented to or sanctioned, the course of the proceedings.²⁶ Accordingly, a consent judgment,²⁷ a judgment by confession,²⁸ or a judgment voluntarily paid²⁹ cannot be reviewed by certiorari. However, a motion to vacate an order and a later consent to the setting for hearing of a motion to modify the order, do not serve to estop a petitioner from seeking a writ of certiorari to set aside the modifying order.³⁰ A party seeking to have his case determined as if a writ of certiorari had been issued may not contend that certiorari was not a proper remedy.³¹

V. PROCEEDINGS AND DETERMINATION

A. JURISDICTION, PARTIES, AND CONDITIONS PRECEDENT

§ 53. Jurisdiction

Courts of general common-law jurisdiction have, in the absence of constitutional or statutory restrictions, the power to issue writs of certiorari in a proper case.

Courts exercising general common-law jurisdiction have, unless expressly inhibited by statute, the authority to issue a common-law writ of certiorari to inferior jurisdictions where the conditions under which the writ may issue, as discussed in §§ 6-41 supra, are present;³² a court which is vested with both common-law and chancery jurisdiction cannot, however, award the writ in the exercise of its chancery jurisdiction.³³ Jurisdiction to issue a writ of certiorari cannot be conferred by consent of the parties.³⁴ The court, having acquired jurisdiction of the subject matter by a proper application, is not deprived thereof by a denial of the facts on which the application is based.³⁵ In the exercise of its jurisdiction in an original proceeding against a particular court or officer exercising judicial powers, the court cannot enjoin a stranger to the action or require acts of parties not before the court.³⁶

Waiver or estoppel by delay

Where no objection as to parties was made at the time when the writs of certiorari were allowed or when argument was had as to the granting of a stay, such objection is held to be waived and may not be made at a final hearing after the return of the writ has been made.—O'Brien v. § 54. — Power to Issue as Inherent or Statutory

While the power to issue the writ is inherent in the common-law jurisdiction of a proper court, it is usually expressly or by necessary implication conferred by constitutional and statutory provisions.

While it would seem that the power to issue a writ of certiorari in a proper case is inherent in courts of common-law jurisdiction, it is, in most states, expressly or impliedly conferred by constitutional and statutory provisions which are, in some instances, merely an affirmation of common-law powers.³⁸ Unless the authority is inherent or the jurisdiction is expressly or impliedly conferred by constitutional or statutory provisions, there is no power to issue the writ,³⁹ and where the provision is statutory the conditions imposed by the statute as a prerequisite to its existence must exist.⁴⁰

§ 55. — Power of Particular Courts

While the power to issue the writ of certiorari is in some instances conferred on all courts by constitutional or statutory provisions, ordinarily the particular courts which have such power are expressly designated.

In some states the statute or constitution confers the power to issue the writ on all courts, although a provision that the writ may be granted by "any court," etc., has been held to mean any court of original jurisdiction.⁴¹ Ordinarily, however, the particular courts given the power to issue the writ are expressly designated and in some instances jurisdiction is conferred on clerks of courts, justices of the peace, etc. At common law, the rule was that the writ could be allowed only by the court in which the proceedings were to be heard, or by the judge or officer thereof, but the contrary practice has prevailed in Alabama for so many years as to have become settled in that state.⁴² A trial judge cannot grant or refuse certiorari against himself.⁴³

Federal courts. The jurisdiction of federal courts to issue writs of certiorari generally is treated in C.J.S. title Federal Courts § 14, also 25 C.J. p 699 notes 43-49. The authority of the supreme court of the United States to issue such writs is specifically treated in that title §§ 204, 233, also 25 C.J. p 871 note 44-p 879 note 26, p 924 notes 54-58; and the power of the circuit court of appeals, therein § 286, also 25 C.J. p 966 note 83.

State supreme court. The power of a court of last resort, or of general appellate jurisdiction, to issue a writ of certiorari in aid of its jurisdiction is usually present under the various constitutional and statutory provisions;⁴⁴ and it has been pointed out that some constitutional provisions vest the court with the same power and authority in the case as if it had been carried directly by appeal to that court.⁴⁵ The justices of such court have by authority of some statutes the power to issue the writ,

37. Against state board of equalization

Certiorari against a state board of equalization which resides and can be found only in the state capital must be brought in that county, under a statute requiring suits to be brought in the county where defendant resides or where plaintiff resides and defendant may be found, and, where it questions the validity of the action of the board in fixing the value of property for taxes, it cannot be brought in another county where the property taxed is located, as a suit whereby title to real estate may be affected, or for the enforcement of the lien of a special tax bill thereon and, although a local action, accrues at the state capital where the order complained of is made.—*State ex rel. In Tennessee

(1) The supreme court has broad powers, inherent and statutory, respecting issuance of writs of certiorari to enforce its supervisory jurisdiction of inferior tribunals, and the supreme court or the court of appeals has the same jurisdiction to award a writ of certiorari, where appeal or writ of error does not lie, to correct errors of inferior courts, that the circuit court has in such cases to award the writ to correct errors of tribunals inferior to that court.—Cockrill v. People's Sav. Bank, 293 S.W. 996, 155 Tenn. 342.

(2) That petitioner erroneously applied to court of appeals for writs of certiorari and supersedeas instead of to the supreme court on the chancellor's denial of an injunction, which was the only relief sought by the bill, was disregarded as ill-advised and without effect in determining whether the supreme court had jurisdiction to entertain a petition for such writ.—Cockrill v. People's Sav. Bank, supra.

and a single justice acts, normally, as a single justice, and not as the court itself, in awarding and determining a rule to show cause why a writ of certiorari should not be allowed.⁴⁶

Higher courts of original jurisdiction. On account of the inconvenience and delay occasioned by repeated applications to the supreme courts, jurisdiction to grant the writ of certiorari has in many instances been conferred by express statutory enactment on the higher courts of original jurisdiction, which possess the same general power of superintending control over the lower courts of the state that is inherently vested in the court of last resort over all other courts. These courts, held to have power to issue the writ, include circuit courts,⁴⁷ district courts,⁴⁸ and superior courts,⁴⁹ which are all of the same general jurisdiction but called by different names in different states. In some states district or circuit courts are courts of concurrent jurisdiction with county or probate courts, in which case, as shown supra § 45, the former cannot review the proceedings of the latter by certiorari. However, if the jurisdiction is not concurrent the writ may issue.⁵⁰

County and probate courts. In some states the power of superintending control has been extended by statute to inferior courts of record, such as county or probate courts, giving them power to issue the writ of certiorari in aid of such jurisdiction wherever it is shown that the tribunals over which they exercise this authority have exceeded the limits of their jurisdiction, or where no other method is provided for reviewing their decisions.⁵¹

Commissioners. The power to issue the writ may be conferred by the legislature on supreme court commissioners.⁵² In Michigan circuit court commissioners are given the power to issue the writ,⁵³ but not so as to interfere with the proceedings of circuit courts.⁵⁴

§ 56. — Limitations on Jurisdiction

The jurisdiction of a particular court may be limited by the amount in controversy or by the character of the proceeding as civil or criminal or as original or appellate.

If the jurisdiction of the court is restricted to criminal matters or proceedings, such limitation applies to writs of certiorari.⁵⁵ So, where a court has appellate jurisdiction only,⁵⁶ or can grant the writ only in aid of such jurisdiction, or of its supervisory powers,⁵⁷ it may only issue in that behalf.

A court restricted to the consideration of cases where the amount in controversy shall equal or exceed a specified sum has no jurisdiction to issue a writ of certiorari where the amount involved is less,⁵⁸ but unless so restricted, the jurisdiction does

§ 57. — Conflict of Jurisdiction

Notwithstanding inferior courts have jurisdiction over lesser jurisdictions, higher courts may issue the writ, although ordinarily they will do so only when justice cannot be done otherwise.

If exclusive jurisdiction is vested in a particular court, it can be exercised only by that court,⁶⁰ but constitutional authority to inferior courts to remove causes from lesser jurisdictions will not exclude the authority of the superior courts to issue the writ.⁶¹ As a rule, a higher court of the state will not take jurisdiction where the application can be made to a lower court, unless for special reasons complete justice cannot otherwise be done,⁶² as where the case is of more than ordinary magnitude and importance, to prevent a denial of justice,⁶³ or where no application can be made to the lower court in time to prevent the consummation of the alleged wrong.⁶⁴ Under the English practice, the writ issued out of the king's bench to draw to it jurisdiction over cases which properly belonged to it or with which it had concurrent jurisdiction.⁶⁵

§ 58. Parties

A relator or petitioner and a defendant or respondent are essential to a writ of certiorari.

There must be a petitioner or relator and a respondent or party or parties defendant in proceedings for certiorari.⁶⁶ One who has no interest in sustaining a judgment sought to be reviewed is not a necessary party.⁶⁷

§ 59. — Plaintiffs

In general the person aggrieved is the proper party plaintiff, the state being a proper party plaintiff only where such person cannot be himself the plaintiff or where the state or community has a right or interest in the subject matter. Whether persons may or should join as plaintiffs must, in general, be determined by the joint or several character of their interests in the controversy.

In matters of individual controversy the party seeking relief should be named as plaintiff,⁶⁸ but the state is properly plaintiff in those cases, and only in those cases, in which the individual for whose benefit the writ is sued out cannot, on legal principles, be himself the plaintiff, or where the state or the whole community have some rights or interest in the subject matter, not speculative or political, but direct and positive rights and interests which are to be affected one way or the other.⁶⁹ If a county is aggrieved it will be more formal to sue out the writ in its name, but commissioners who exercise its corporate powers may act.⁷⁰

Persons who may institute proceedings see supra §§ 47-52.

Informality of applying for a writ of certiorari directly in the name of applicant, instead of in the name of the state on relation of applicant in accordance with the usual and proper procedure, is not fatal, where the petition otherwise discloses a right to the writ.—Davenport v. Sterling Lumber Co., 79 So. 215, 143 La. 671.

70. Pa.—Northampton County's App., 57 Pa. 452.

Persons severally affected. It is improper to join persons who are not jointly interested in the proceedings of which a review is sought, and whose interests are separate and distinct.⁷¹ Parties severally affected by the proceedings below must sue out separate writs, although there is but one act to be reviewed⁷² and but one record.⁷³ However, where two parties petition for writs of certiorari to review the same judgment, but the entire matter can be disposed of on one petition, the other will be denied.⁷⁴

Persons who have no ground of complaint should not be united with those who are entitled to the writ.⁷⁵ So, two or more who are not in privity cannot unite in one writ to review separate judgments against them;⁷⁶ nor can they unite where they seek similar, but not the same, relief.⁷⁷

If the determination is against several defendants, only one of whom appeared, the others may sue out the writ, but on its return should take a rule on the one who appeared to show cause why they may not prosecute without him.⁷⁸

Failure to join a garnishee is immaterial, where the time within which he might sue out the writ has expired.⁷⁹

Persons jointly affected. Persons jointly affected by the determination below must prosecute jointly,⁸⁰ unless there is a severance;⁸¹ but one may prosecute on showing that his codefendant is incapable of consenting or is absent from the state,⁸² and on a release of errors by one the proceeding may continue in the name of the other.⁸³

§ 60. — Defendants

While, strictly speaking, only the tribunal whose act it is sought to examine is a necessary defendant, other parties may and must be brought in if their rights are to be adjudicated.

Strictly speaking, the only proper respondent or defendant on a petition for a writ of certiorari to bring up and quash the proceedings of an inferior tribunal is the tribunal whose action is to be examined, although it is proper to permit counsel for parties having a private interest in maintaining the proceeding to appear by the permission and in the name of respondents to oppose the petition,⁸⁴ and the practice is likewise usual and proper to bring in all parties or other persons who are liable to be affected by the judgment in order that they may have an opportunity to be heard.⁸⁵ However, while it has been stated broadly in some jurisdictions that all persons interested and whose rights are directly affected or who are proper parties to the record sought to be annulled must be made defendants,⁸⁶ it has also been held that the presence of such parties is not necessary to the issuance of the writ although it may be regarded as necessary to the rendition of a judgment binding on them.⁸⁷ In other words, the rights of one not a party to the proceedings cannot be determined unless he is brought into court;⁸⁸ but, on the other hand, it is discretionary and not jurisdictional with the court as to whether parties who will be collaterally affected by the judgment shall be brought in before judgment is pronounced.⁸⁹ If the office of the writ is limited to an inquiry into the inferior jurisdiction, it is improper to join tribunals or officers exercising separate and distinct jurisdictions, or persons having no voice in the proceedings to be reviewed.⁹⁰ A municipality need not be joined as a defendant where a private nuisance is the only matter involved.⁹¹

§ 61. — New Parties and Change of Parties

In the discretion of the court new parties may be added or there may be a substitution of parties.

It is generally held proper to allow new parties to be added;⁹² and in some jurisdictions the code provisions as to amendments have been held applicable to certiorari.⁹³ So, in the discretion of the court, others standing in the same relation as the original relators to the proceedings sought to be reviewed may be admitted to occupy the same position, although the time limited for suing out the writ has expired;⁹⁴ but it has been held that an application for leave to intervene in the proceeding on the eve of a final judgment comes too late.⁹⁵ Persons without interest in the matter pending on certiorari and not aggrieved by the determination to be reviewed cannot intervene.⁹⁶

It may be necessary to add new parties before the hearing, to enable the court to render a decision. Thus, where, pending certiorari against a municipal corporation, it is dissolved by quo warranto, and the municipal government passed into the control of a previously existing town corporation, the latter must be brought in before the hearing.⁹⁷

Court should not place itself in position of adverse party, as if it had some personal interest in sustaining its judgment, or throw obstacles in the way to prevent a review of its proceedings.—Hilton v. Second Judicial District Court in and for Washoe County, 183 P. 317, 43 Nev. 128.

Instigator of original action

District Court in and for Clarke County*, 207 N.W. 129, 201 Iowa 292.

(2) Certiorari to review order releasing attached property did not fail because defendant and his wife, who petitioned for release, were not made parties, where wife made no appearance except to present affidavit when applying for release, and defendant made no claim to attached property.—*Hilton Bros. After remand

Where on certiorari to the supreme court a decree in favor of minority stockholders was modified, and the cause remanded, petitions for leave to intervene and to share in the benefits of the decree, filed in the supreme court by other minority stockholders, action on which was postponed to the hearing of the case on the merits, should be dismissed without prejudice to their right to apply in the lower court to intervene.—*Southern Pac. § 62. Conditions Precedent

Conditions precedent imposed by statute or rules of court must be complied with.

Requirements which are by statute or rule of court conditions precedent to the issue of the writ must be complied with.⁹⁹ Thus, where a rule of the supreme court provides that no application for the writ will be considered, unless an application for rehearing has been made in the court of appeals and refused, the petition must show that a rehearing was applied for.¹ On proceedings relating to a sale of real property for taxes, where only the interest charge is in controversy, certiorari will not issue except on payment of the taxes admittedly due.² Bond or other security and payment of costs or fees as a condition precedent are considered in this Title, infra §§ 90-98.

B. TIME FOR TAKING PROCEEDINGS

§ 63. In General

A failure to make timely application may preclude the issuance of the writ.

As stated in § 20 supra, the general rule is that the writ does not lie until the proceedings are terminated. Thereafter, unreasonable delay or failure to apply within the time limited by statute or established by the local practice is good ground for refusing the writ, in the absence of exceptional circumstances.³ As shown in succeeding sections of this Title, the court may refuse to grant the writ:

(2) A certiorari to a decision of an ordinary, not the court of ordinary, will not be dismissed because exceptions to the decisions were not tendered at the time in writing.—Fortson v. Mattox, 67 Ga. 282.—Goldring v. Parrish, 106 S.E. 743, 26 Ga. App. 495—11 C.J. p 143 note 98 [a].

Setting for oral argument

(1) A statute concerned with the review by the supreme court of judgments of the court of appeals and relating specifically to a review of cases that have been "finally determined" in the latter court, which provides that no certiorari shall be granted unless at the same time it shall be set down for oral argument in the supreme court, does not prevent the issuance of certiorari, without argument of a case not "finally determined in the court of appeals," under another statute authorizing it to issue where an inferior tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction or is acting illegally.—Hicks v. Hicks, 79 S.W.2d 802, 168 Tenn. 539.

(2) Affirmance by court of appeals of judgments without considering merits on ground that bill of exceptions could not be considered would not be treated as case "finally determined in the Court of Appeals," within statute providing for oral argument upon granted petitions of certiorari.—*Moore v. In Tennessee

(1) Application for the writ must be made to the first term of the court after the rendition of the judgment, or else some sufficient cause for the delay must be shown in the petition.—City of Nashville v. Mason, 11 Tenn.App. 344—11 C.J. p 143 note 27 [c].

Provision as to certified copy of opinion

Acts 1915 p 606, as to furnishing certified copy of the opinions of the court of appeals and giving notice within five days after the rendition of the decision to the attorneys, has no effect on Rule 42, 175 Ala. xx, as to time for making application for certiorari to review judgment of the court of appeals.—*Ex parte Mobile Light & R. by statute and such time has expired, infra § 64. (2) Where the time is regulated by the time to appeal or take out a writ of error, and such time has expired, infra § 65. (3) Where applicant has delayed for an unreasonable time, there being no statute limiting the time, and the circumstances are such as to warrant the denial of the writ because of such delay, infra § 66. A party's right to a writ of review cannot be cut off, however, by antedating an order or the entry thereof.⁴

A certiorari may be issued even after judgment executed, where a limited authority has been transcended by an inferior jurisdiction, in cases where no writ of error lies, for the purpose of quashing their proceedings.⁵

The writ cannot be objected to as premature, where an appeal has not been taken as the law requires, and where the transcript has been filed in the appellate court, where the ground for the writ is based on the want of some act which would make the appeal effective if taken, and where the time to take such action has passed, and cannot, under the law, be made effective thereafter.⁶

§ 64. Statutory and Constitutional Limitations

Where the matter is controlled by statutory or constitutional provisions, the certiorari proceedings should be instituted within the stipulated period or a valid extension thereof.

Special limitations are laid down by statute, in some of the states, which vary according to the proceeding sought to be reviewed or the nature of the tribunal whose judgment is objected to; and the court properly refuses to grant the writ where the application was made after expiration of the statutory time,⁷ even though the application had been previously sanctioned by the court.⁸

Effect as precluding defense of laches. Where the time for commencing proceedings is limited by statute, the right to apply at any time within the statutory period is absolute.⁹

Power to grant writ after expiration of time. While the wording of the particular statute is the important factor, yet it seems that, if the statute fixes a time within which the application "must" be made, the court has no jurisdiction to grant a writ after such time.¹⁰ However, it has been held that, if the inferior tribunal had no jurisdiction, the superior court can entertain a petition for certio-

Reasonableness of limitation

In New York

(1) Early decisions, and some of the later ones, hold that a review of the action of a municipal body must be sought while it retains jurisdiction of the proceedings.—Osterhoudt v. Rigney, 98 N.Y. 222—11 C.J. p 145 note 49.

(2) But later decisions of the higher courts hold that, inasmuch as the statute which requires the writ to be procured and served within a stated time after the determination complained of is not solely a statute of limitations, but by implication grants the relator the time specified within which to procure the writ, it follows that, where, although the determining body has finally adjourned after making a disposition of the matter in question, it or its successor can subsequently obey an order of the court, the application within the statutory time is not barred by final adjournment of the determining body.—Peo. v. Sutphin, 59 N.E. 770, 166 N.Y. 163.

rari and quash the judgment, in spite of the fact that the petition was not filed within the statutory period;¹¹ and the pendency of a motion to dismiss the appeal has been deemed sufficient excuse for failing to file the application for certiorari within the required time.¹² Where the time is limited by a constitutional provision, the court is without jurisdiction to allow the writ after such time.¹³

What statute governs. The limitation is governed by the law in force at the time of the alleged illegal action.¹⁴ Where no limitation is fixed by an act creating a new court, a general act will govern;¹⁵ but where a statute points out a particular remedy for the particular wrong allegedly suffered by the petitioner that particular remedy should be followed within the time limited, notwithstanding a general certiorari statute permits the proceeding to be brought within a longer period of time.¹⁶ A limitation respecting the suing out of a certiorari to review a judgment is not applicable to proceedings to remove an inquisition.¹⁷

Running of statute. When the statute begins to run from the determination below, a final determination is intended;¹⁸ from the time of a decree, the rendition of the decree and not the first day of the term;¹⁹ from the time the determination to be reviewed becomes final and binding, the date of a denial of rehearing, if any;²⁰ from the rendition of the final judgment complained of, that judgment and not a subsequent final judgment as to which the petition for certiorari does not complain;²¹ from confirmation of the action complained of, legal confirmation;²² from the rendition of the judgment of an appellate court, the date of its rendition and entry;²³ from the time a rehearing shall have been refused, when attorneys of record received notice of the decree refusing the rehearing;²⁴ from and after the trial, the day after the trial;²⁵ before the first day of the term at which the issue might be tried, the first term at which the cause might be regularly noticed for trial;²⁶ from the time a board has exceeded its jurisdiction, the time an assessment for a public improvement is made and not the time when the improvement is ordered;²⁷ and from the illegal action of a public board, the Statute defining "final decree"

Under a statute providing that petition to review the court of appeals "shall be filed in the Supreme Court within forty-five days after final decree in the Court of Appeals, including decree upon any application to that court for a rehearing or for different or additional findings," the forty-five days are computed from the date decree is entered by the court of appeals on such application.—Houk v. Memphis Const. Co., 5 S.W.2d 472, 157 Tenn. 15.

Untimely petition to rehear

Where the rules require petitions for rehearing to be filed within ten days, and a petition to rehear was filed forty-four days after final judgment was entered without an extension of time, a fiat from the presiding judge being obtained on petition to rehear, but an adjudication being expressly reserved, and the petition was subsequently dismissed, petition for certiorari could not be filed in the supreme court after more than ninety days, the time allowed for filing certiorari, has elapsed from the time of the final judgment of the court below, although not from the time of the dismissal of the petition to rehear.—Tennessee Cent. R. Co. v. Jenkins, 221 S.W. 189, 142 Tenn. 484.

Second denial of rehearing

Under a statute providing that certiorari to review judgment of the court of civil appeals shall not be issued after ninety days from final judgment, the statutory period runs from the date of the denial of the first petition for rehearing; and since a second petition for rehearing by the same party is not recognized by the rules of the appellate courts, such petition, when denied, cannot be availed of to extend the period.—State Bank & Trust Co. v. Nashville Trust Co., 202 S.W. 68, 139 Tenn. 472.

time the first step is taken which will affect the complaining party injuriously.²⁸ Under a statute limiting the time to a specified period after the party applying shall have received, due notice of the proceeding sought to be reviewed, the time does not begin to run until written notice has been served on the party or his attorney; and actual notice does not take the place of such written notice.²⁹ A certiorari is brought when the petition is filed;³⁰ but it has been held that, where the application is commenced by an order to show cause the mere preparation of a petition, unaccompanied by any official action or notice to respondent, cannot be considered the institution of a proceeding to review by certiorari.³¹ The mere pendency of a petition for the writ does not suspend the running of time, where the petitioner has failed to give required timely notice of the sanction of the writ or of the time and place of hearing;³² and the mere suing out of the writ, without complying with the prerequisites to its issue, does not suspend the time.³³ So, where one party files a petition for a writ of certiorari, the filing of a cross-petition by another party does not extend the latter's time to apply for certiorari.³⁴

Extension of time. General statutes providing for the bringing of a new action in certain cases after the failure of a former action, and thereby extending the time to sue, have been held applicable to certiorari proceedings.³⁵ A provision authorizing the court to extend the time for filing the application does not authorize such an extension after the original period has elapsed, however; the application to extend must be made before expiration of that period.³⁶

§ 65. Analogy to Appeals and Writs of Error

In absence of statute the time for filing writs of error and appeals is sometimes considered as controlling in certiorari proceedings.

In the absence of statute, the limitation determined on is often governed by analogy to the limitation on writs of error and appeals.³⁷ Such limitation, however, is merely a guide to the general limits of discretion, and not an inflexible rule;³⁸ but in order that a party may bring himself outside of this limitation, he must show circumstances which justify the delay in applying for the writ.³⁹ Thus, where it appeared that the complaining party was incompetent to manage his affairs, in ill health, and without financial means, it was held that the laches was excusable.⁴⁰

In the absence of any limitation fixed by statutes or rules, the writ must be applied for within a reasonable time, and may be denied for laches.

Laches may be asserted as a defense to an application for certiorari,⁴¹ and where the question is not regulated by statute or the fixed procedure, it may be stated, as a general rule, that the writ must be applied for within a reasonable time, or it will be refused or dismissed if improvidently issued.⁴²

There is no hard and fast rule by which to determine whether laches has barred the remedy,⁴³ but each case must depend on its own peculiar facts.⁴⁴ What period will constitute "a reasonable time," within the meaning of the rule laid down, is a question for the judicial discretion of the court in most cases,⁴⁵ and its exercise of that discretion will not be revised, if not abused,⁴⁶ but no unreasonable diligence will be required.⁴⁷

Certiorari to review judgment

(1) Under Rev.St.1919 § 1520, requiring the clerk of the supreme court to certify a copy of the opinion to the circuit court within thirty days after filing, made applicable to the court of appeals by Const. art 6 § 15, thirty days after the denial of a rehearing is, in ordinary cases, a reasonable time for aggrieved parties to apply to the supreme court for a writ of certiorari to review a judgment of the court of appeals.—State ex rel. Al. G. Barnes Amusement Co. v. Trimble, 300 S.W. 1064, 318 Mo. 274—State ex rel. Berkshire v. Ellison, 230 S.W. 970, 287 Mo. 654.

(2) As to laches in applying for certiorari to review a judgment and opinion of the court of appeals, the opinion was not a finality until after a motion for rehearing was overruled, but thereafter it was a finality so far as that court was concerned, unless it changed its opinion and judgment of its own motion. So, where an application for a writ of certiorari to review a judgment of the court of appeals was made more than a year after the opinion of the court of appeals was handed down, more than nine months after the denial of a rehearing, and some seven months after the mandate had gone down and been acted upon by the entry of the judgment directed by the court of appeals, and although it was claimed that the delay was due to an attempt by mandamus to compel the writing of the opinion below so as to state the facts, the application was barred by laches.—State ex rel. Berkshire v. Ellison, supra.

sult from granting the writ after the delay, it will ordinarily be refused.⁴⁹ Thus, it will be refused where the party has, by reason of laches in not taking the objection at an earlier stage, permitted the adverse party to make large expenditures,⁵⁰ as for objects beneficial to the party seeking to quash the proceedings,⁵¹ and it may be refused where applicant speculating on the outcome of the proceedings sought to be reviewed, delays his application for certiorari until those proceedings prove disappointing to him.⁵²

Public detriment or inconvenience. Where a reversal of the proceedings sought to be reviewed would result in detriment or inconvenience to the public, or is calculated to derange the interests of society, a party is required to act speedily in making his application, and any unreasonable delay in so doing will warrant the refusal or dismissal of the writ.⁵³ For instance, in case of public improvements unreasonable delay is fatal.⁵⁴

Expenditure of public money. Where the petitioner has slept on his rights, and postponed his application until the proceedings sought to be reviewed have been confirmed or carried into execution, and public money has been expended thereon, the writ will be denied,⁵⁵ although the mere fact that a salary has been paid does not establish laches barring certiorari to review resolutions granting the payment.⁵⁶

Want of knowledge as excuse. Want of knowledge may be an excuse for not moving promptly.⁵⁷

Knowledge of agent

Applicant for certiorari is charge-

Thus, it is a good excuse that the judgment complained of was secretly rendered without notice or means of knowledge.⁵⁸

§ 67. Objections and Waiver Thereof

Objections to time of applying for the writ must be seasonably taken, and may be waived.

As shown infra § 135, a motion to dismiss or quash the writ is a proper method of objecting to the proceedings because not instituted within the time limited. Laches in applying for the writ may be waived by appearance and pleading,⁵⁹ or by making a return;⁶⁰ and it has been said that a question as to the timeliness of the application is foreclosed by the issuance of the writ.⁶¹ The defense of laches in applying for certiorari to review municipal action must be urged promptly,⁶² but the failure of a municipality promptly to raise this question may be excused in a particular case on the grounds of public policy and expediency.⁶³

C. APPLICATION AND HEARING THEREON

§ 68. Necessity for Application

A formal application showing a prima facie case for relief is prerequisite to issue of certiorari except when sued out by the sovereign power or where the local practice is to the contrary.

Except when sued out by the sovereign power,⁶⁴ or in particular proceedings where the local practice is to the contrary,⁶⁵ certiorari will not issue of course, but an application by petition, affidavit, or other mode prescribed, showing prima facie a case for relief, is prerequisite to its issue.⁶⁶ The petition is the pleading, and its purpose is to set in motion the proceeding.⁶⁷ The same petition cannot serve as the basis for a second writ in the same case.⁶⁸ Furthermore, the necessity for an application is not waived by appearance.⁶⁹ A petition in error is not a substitute for a petition for a writ of certiorari.⁷⁰

Separate applications are necessary on behalf of defendant who seeks the review of two cases against him by different plaintiffs not in privacy,⁷¹

although by consent the cases were tried together.⁷² Likewise, on the application of one party, the adverse party to a proceeding cannot have errors reviewed.⁷³ So, where it is sought to review orders made by different courts in different cases by certiorari proceedings, a separate application for a writ of certiorari must be made for each court.⁷⁴

§ 69. Authority and Competency to Make Application

Questions relating to authority and competency to apply for certiorari are, together with questions as to who may institute the proceedings, considered supra §§ 47-52.

§ 70. Form and Contents of Applications

The petition must conform to the requirements of the local practice and with reasonable certainty allege all facts essential to establish the right to certiorari.

The application must conform to statutory requirements or rules of practice,⁷⁵ and particular allegations of wrong or injustice which are required by statute must be made,⁷⁶ unless in a case where such averments are clearly inapplicable.⁷⁷ The application must disclose the ground on which the writ should be issued,⁷⁸ and must show that substantial justice demands it.⁷⁹ It must also set out with reasonable certainty,⁸⁰ but not necessarily such certainty as rebuts every conclusion to the contrary,⁸¹ all the facts essential to establish the right to certiorari,⁸² that is, the facts showing illegal action below and consequent injury,⁸³ so that the court may see, assuming the petition to be true, that there is error.⁸⁴ Mere conclusions of law are insufficient.⁸⁵ Where it is impossible without such information to know whether the determination sought to be reviewed was error, the court should be informed of the nature of the suit, what the issues were,⁸⁶ and, as shown infra § 76, what the evidence was. So, it has been held that the application must show by whom the decision sought to be reviewed was rendered,⁸⁷ but the view has been taken that while good pleading requires the petition to name the judge or division of the court rendering the judgment sought to be reviewed, fail-

Illegality on face of record

A petition for certiorari to review the proceedings and judgment of a court should make it appear that an illegal proceeding appears by the face of the record, of which complaint is made.—Ex parte Jones, 110 So. 532, 92 Fla. 1015—11 C.J. p 150 note 19 [a].

Illegality sufficiently shown

Specific allegation of illegality of the court of appeals' actions, as constituted of one regular judge and special judge, in a petition for a writ of certiorari, and a contention in the supporting suggestion that the court contravened the supreme court ruling in a certain case by thus proceeding, was held sufficient, although the relator did not cite such case in the petition, according to the letter of supreme court rules, rule 34.—State ex rel. Allen v. Trimble, 297 S.W. 378, 317 Mo. 751, quashing record Allen v. Best, 279 S.W. 728, 220 Mo.App. 1041.

ure to do so does not invalidate an otherwise sufficient petition.⁸⁸ It is unnecessary to allege legal conclusions in addition to the facts,⁸⁹ or to make allegations with respect to issues not properly triable on certiorari.⁹⁰ Unless the statute so requires, paragraphs need not be numbered.⁹¹

If the application, although loosely drawn or somewhat obscure, discloses merits and that injustice has probably been suffered, the lack of precision may be disregarded.⁹² So, technical defects will be disregarded;⁹³ substantial compliance with the statutory requirements is sufficient.⁹⁴

Different proceedings cannot be brought up by the same petition.⁹⁵ However, a petition may embrace every exception taken on the trial, as it is not necessary to file a separate petition for every exception.⁹⁶ So, a petition to review the record of a board of education in several times locating, or attempting to locate, a schoolhouse site for the same schoolhouse on the same land is not objectionable as double because seeking to test the validity of several separate proceedings, where they all related to the same matter and land.⁹⁷ On petition for certiorari to revise and correct the probate orders in partition, there is no misjoinder of causes of action, although the right of petitioner under the will to land partitioned to others is asserted.⁹⁸

the local practice, although irregularities are not ordinarily fatal.

It has been held that the petition should be presented in the name of the party to the suit who is applicant, and by preserving the original caption of the suit.⁹⁹ However, the fact that the petition is not entitled in any court and does not contain the names of formal plaintiffs or defendants, is not fatal to the proceedings so as to invalidate the writ, where the petition contains all the essential requisites of the statute.¹ Under a statute abolishing the state writ of certiorari and providing for relief by certiorari order, certiorari proceedings should be entitled "In the Matter of the Application of" petitioner, instead of as "People of the State of . . . on the Relation of" petitioner;² but where the application in other respects substantially complies with the statute, it is not rendered fatally defective by the fact that it is entitled in the name of the state, on relation of the petitioner named, where the state has no interest in the matter,³ or by the fact that it is designated a petition instead of an application.⁴ An original action to review a judge's order is a "special proceeding" within a statute authorizing designation of the parties as plaintiff and defendant.⁵

necessary,⁶ and, as shown infra § 150, where the reviewing court is so restricted, matters not assigned as error in the petition will not be reviewed. Moreover, it has been held that a petition for certiorari which contains no proper assignment of errors is void.⁷ General allegations of error are ordinarily insufficient, and the particular errors complained of and relied on should distinctly be set forth.⁸ However, at least in some states, a general assignment is sufficient where the error is apparent on the face of the proceeding.⁹ Where failure to follow a decision of a higher court is relied on as error, the conflict must be called to the attention of the court to which application for certiorari is made,¹⁰ but a court rule requiring that the petition shall concisely set out the issue pre-

Requiring scrutiny of evidence

An assignment of error complaining of the judge's failure to instruct the jury as to the measure of damages depends on a scrutiny of the evidence, since the general rule requiring such instruction is subject to exception, as in a case where the damages found by the jury were so small as not to be unauthorized by the evidence in any event.—Briesenick v. Insufficiency of notice

Assignment of error on judgment abating nuisance, on ground that notice to defendant was insufficient, is incomplete where the notice served on defendant is not set forth either in form or in substance.—O'Quinn v. Mayor and Council of Homerville, 157 S.E. 109, 42 Ga.App. 628.

Failure to swear witnesses

Assignment of error, on the ground that none of the witnesses were legally sworn, is insufficient if not stating the oath was not administered or the nature of oath if administered.—O'Quinn v. Mayor and Council of Homerville, 157 S.E. 109, 42 Ga.App. 628.

Charge

Assignment complaining that charge was confusing, unintelligible, and incomplete could not be considered, where it failed to point out wherein charge was confusing, unintelligible, and incomplete.—Hill v. George, 170 S.E. 326, 47 Ga.App. 272.

Ga.—Starnes v. Bacon, 103 S.E. 39, 25 Ga.App. 260.

Overruling motion for new trial

(1) Petition excepting to overruling of motion for new trial must state plainly and distinctly grounds urged, general exception to overruling motion will not suffice, even though exceptions set forth alleged errors.—Wrenn v. Bowden, Ga.App., 193 S.E. 456—Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. F. Graham, Williams Brick Co., 138 S.E. 248, 36 Ga.App. 814—East River Nat. Bank v. Ellman, 136 S.E. 799, 36 Ga.App. 263—Reese v. Miller, 126 S.E. 904, 33 Ga.App. 442.

(2) Where error is assigned in a petition for certiorari on a ruling based on a motion for a new trial, and the grounds of the motion are set forth in the petition, a general assignment of error that the court erred in so ruling is sufficient.—National Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Ozburn, 156 S.E. 305, 42 Ga.App. 393.

(3) Where a petition for certiorari to review a judgment overruling a motion for a new trial set forth the grounds of the motion and disclosed that one of them was that the court erred in directing the verdict because there were issues of fact for determination by the jury, a general assignment, then made in the petition, that the court erred in overruling the motion, was sufficient to bring into question the propriety of the court's action in directing the verdict.—Hopkins Inv. Co. v. Crawford, 132 S.E. 925, 35 Ga.App. 331.

In Maine

(1) It is necessary that the petition should allege that the irregularities and errors specified appear by the record which it is sought to quash.—Jellerson v. Board of Police of City of Biddeford, 187 A. 713, 134 Me. 443—11 C.J. p 151 note 51 [h].

(2) Consequently, failure of allegation in the petition that alleged irregularities and errors appear in record, is fatal, since the issue involves the legal sufficiency of the record.—Jellerson v. Board of Police of City of Biddeford, supra.

(3) It is essential that the petition should clearly, definitely, and completely assign and set forth the claims of irregularity and error that appear in the record.—Chavarie v. Robie, 194 A. 404—Jellerson v. Board of Police of City of Biddeford, supra.

sented to the court below, and show how the conflicting ruling arose, does not require a statement of the facts in the case, but merely requires a statement of the issues presented, the rulings thereon, and wherein and in what manner the rulings conflict with the decisions of the higher court.¹¹ An application sufficiently raises the point to be considered where a memorandum attached to the application and referred to therein contains the point;¹² if the petition clearly states the grounds of complaint, the fact that it sets forth other immaterial grounds is unimportant.¹³ Matters dehors the record cannot be relied on as error.¹⁴

§ 73. — Showing Merits and Good Faith

Where required by the local practice the applicant must make a sufficient showing of merits and good faith.

In some jurisdictions applicant must show a prima facie case of merits,¹⁵ and in some states must show also his means of establishing them on another trial, so that it may appear that the determination complained of will probably be changed.¹⁶ Although an allegation of good faith is often inserted in the petition, it is not, where not required by statute, an indispensable allegation. If the facts stated show a meritorious case and a prima facie right to the writ, good faith will, in the absence of anything to the contrary, be presumed. There is no rule of the common law which unconditionally requires an affirmative showing of good faith.¹⁷ Nevertheless, in some jurisdictions, it has been held at one time or another that an affidavit of good faith or of merits must be presented,¹⁸ and such an affidavit must contain the averments required by statute.¹⁹ It is sufficient, however, if it substantially conforms to the requirements of the statute.²⁰

§ 74. — Excusing Failure to Pursue Other Remedy

Ordinarily the application should present some sufficient reason for not resorting to appeal or other available remedy.

Except where appeal is a concurrent remedy,²¹ the application must present some sufficient reason for not resorting to appeal or to some other appropriate and available remedy,²² and, in case there is a remedy by appeal, it must state facts showing the inability to take or perfect an appeal in time,²³ or that the petitioner lost his right of appeal through some unavoidable casualty,²⁴ and not through his own want of diligence.²⁵ Likewise it has been held that some sufficient reason must be

Allegations held insufficient

Allegation, in affidavit for certiorari to review judgment on note, that surety did not agree to extension without his consent and did not give consent, was not allegation that extension was made discharging surety, and the allegations of the affidavit were, therefore, held insufficient to warrant the issuance of the writ.—Scott v. Tate, Tex.Civ.App., 28 S.W.2d 848.

Knowledge of facts

(1) That affidavit for certiorari made by applicant himself failed to state affiant had knowledge of facts stated therein was unobjectionable, since it will be presumed unless the contrary is shown by the affidavit itself that applicant has knowledge of the facts.—Lanning v. shown why the application is not made to a lower court of concurrent jurisdiction.²⁶

§ 75. — Sufficiency of Allegations in General

The allegations must sufficiently present a case cognizable for review, and when required by the circumstances, must particularly and specifically show performance of conditions precedent, the right to institute the proceedings, want of jurisdiction, and rendition of judgment.

Whether or not a cause brought for review presents a case cognizable for review on writ of certiorari must depend on the showing made in the individual petition.²⁷ The petition must be complete in itself, and omissions cannot be supplied by reference to the transcript.²⁸

Conditions precedent. The application must distinctly and specifically aver performance of conditions precedent,²⁹ such as the filing of a bond or the making of a pauper affidavit where this is required.³⁰

Right to institute proceeding. Applicant must show that he occupies such a relation to the controversy as to entitle him to sue out the writ,³¹ and that he has interests which will be affected injuriously by the proceedings sought to be reviewed;³² but a failure to allege such facts in the application is not fatal where they are sufficiently shown by the judgment of the respondent court attached to, and made a part of, the application, and by respondent's answer.³³ He must show freedom from laches in applying for the writ in case no appeal lies.³⁴ Where the writ issues only in such case, the petition must show on its face that the petitioner has no other mode of review,³⁵ but, although an allegation in that regard may be defective, if the petition in its entirety discloses the absence of another remedy, that is sufficient.³⁶ It is unnecessary, however, to show that defendant applying for certiorari had no right of appeal where the personal judgment against him was rendered without service of summons.³⁷

Want of jurisdiction. If the application is based on want or excess of jurisdiction, such facts must be set out that the court may see that there is just

Where a certiorari is applied for after the expiration of the statutory period from the date of the judgment complained of, the petition should show on its face that it is a renewal of a previously dismissed certiorari sued out within the proper time in the same cause, and that the renewal is within the statutory time from the date of the dismissal of the previous certiorari.—Sweat v. City of Atlanta, 174 S.E. 548, 49 Ga.App. 151—Smith v. City of Atlanta, 174 S.E. 171, 48 Ga.App. 853—Morris v. Battey, 121 S.E. 125, 31 Ga.App. 438.

ground of complaint.³⁸ It is not sufficient merely to state the legal conclusion as to want or excess of jurisdiction.³⁹

Judgment. A petition for a certiorari as a writ of false judgment must show that a judgment was rendered;⁴⁰ and the nature and amount of the judgment and against whom it was rendered should be stated.⁴¹ The petition for a writ of certiorari to quash an order of the inferior court setting aside a judgment previously entered in the cause by the clerk of the court must set out a copy of the judgment so set aside.⁴²

§ 76. — Setting Out Evidence

The evidence must be substantially set out in the petition if the case requires a review of the evidence.

Where the reviewing court looks to the opinion of the court below alone for findings of fact, inclusion in the petition of recitals of evidence found in the record of that court is improper,⁴³ and, where the writ issues only to correct errors of law apparent on the face of the record when properly extended, matters purely evidentiary in nature have no proper place in the petition for the writ;⁴⁴ but all the evidence introduced below should substantially be set out if it is complained that the determination was contrary to the evidence, and this is a ground for the writ,⁴⁵ or if the illegality complained of is not shown by the record proper and a statement of the facts and evidence in the case is necessary to inform the court what the case really was;⁴⁶ and the petition should allege that the facts recited as proved on the trial were all the facts proved.⁴⁷ The petition need not ordinarily set out verbatim the testimony of each witness, nor the exact contents of written instruments, however; it is generally sufficient if the petition gives the substance of the evidence from which it appears that injustice has been done.⁴⁸ On the other hand, plaintiff in certiorari need not make a brief of the evidence but may incorporate in his petition a stenographic transcript of the testimony set forth in questions and answers.⁴⁹

§ 77. — Records or Exhibits

Records or exhibits material to enable the court to judge of the propriety of issuing the writ should accompany or be made part of the application.

If a transcript of the record sought to be reviewed or a copy of the opinion or other papers or documents which are material to enable the court to judge of the propriety of issuing the writ is re-

Brooklyn Union Gas Co. v. Miller, 1 N.Y.S.2d 246, 253 App.Div. 162.

Improper inclusion

In a statutory proceeding for writ of certiorari to set aside the decision of a court on a petition for review of the removal of a police officer by selectmen, inclusion in the petition of a transcript of the evidence taken at the hearing before the selectmen, as an exhibit, was improper, since certiorari merely brings to the supervising court errors of law.—Selectmen of Wakefield v. quired to accompany or to be made a part of the application, noncompliance with such requirement will invalidate the application;⁵⁰ and the fact that respondent in certiorari must certify the record does not relieve the petitioner, when possible, from setting it forth in, or annexing it to, his petition.⁵¹ If the petitioner cannot include or annex the record he should allege his reasons for his inability so to do.⁵² It has been held that all record evidence relied on should be brought before the court as exhibits in the shape of certified or authenticated copies, and not by mere recitals of its existence,⁵³ but there is authority holding that the record of the proceedings sought to be reviewed should not be attached as exhibits to the petition.⁵⁴

Allegation must show that the record, a review of which is asked, is necessarily inaccurate, since, if the writ is granted, the court must determine on the record whether or not the proceedings of the subordinate tribunal or officer exercising judicial powers or functions are legal and regular.⁵⁵

§ 78. — Aider by Reference

Reference to the record of the tribunal which it is sought to review will not ordinarily supply deficiencies in the application.

Entire record

(1) On certiorari to quash opinion and judgment of court of appeals for conflict with supreme court decisions, the entire record should not be brought up by the petition for the writ, but under supreme court Rules, rule 34 the record should consist only of the petition and exhibits accompanying same, together with subsequent proceedings.—State ex rel. Missouri Gas & Electric Service Co. v. Trimble, 271 S.W. 43, 307 Mo. 536.

(2) A petition for certiorari to require the trustees of school districts to transmit for review a transcript of the proceedings for the consolidation of two school districts cannot be denied because the petitioner did not file with his petition a complete transcript of the records of the trustees, it being sufficient if the petition showed petitioner's right to the writ.—Ebeling v. Trustees of Schools of Tp. No. 7, Range No. 8, Jasper County, 121 N.E. 249, 285 Ill. 641.

Where the decision of an intermediate appellate court is sought to be reviewed, it is generally insufficient merely to refer to the record and briefs of such court for the statements of fact and assignments of error.⁵⁶

§ 79. — Prayer

A prayer for such remedy as the court deems proper is sufficient.

The fact that the petition does not specifically pray for a writ of certiorari does not affect the proceedings; a general prayer for such remedy as the court shall deem meet and proper is sufficient.⁵⁷

§ 80. — Signature and Verification

The application for certiorari is usually required to be signed and verified by oath of the applicant or his agent or attorney conversant with the facts.

The application must be properly signed,⁵⁸ but it is sufficient that the affidavit be properly signed.⁵⁹ In the absence of a statute requiring it, however, the application need not be signed by an attorney.⁶⁰

The application in certiorari proceedings is a pleading within statutes relating to verification of pleadings.⁶¹ It is generally held that it must be verified,⁶² and the verification usually assumes the form of an affidavit.⁶³ Where a petition is filed without the required verification, the court has no power after expiration of the time for filing a verified petition to permit the petition to be verified.⁶⁴

In at least one jurisdiction it is held that, when two or more joint defendants against whom a judgment has been rendered apply for a writ, and the petition is verified by only one, he alone should be treated as plaintiff.⁶⁵ In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that the petition need not be subscribed and verified by all the persons on whose behalf it is presented.⁶⁶

Who may make affidavit. The affidavit may be made by the party himself,⁶⁷ even though a minor, if of sufficient discretion to understand an oath.⁶⁸ Ordinarily, however, while a stranger cannot make the affidavit⁶⁹ it need not be made by the party individually, but may be made by any person who is conversant with the facts, such as his agent⁷⁰ or attorney,⁷¹ and it is immaterial whether the attorney making the affidavit represented the applicant in the proceeding below.⁷²

§ 81. Presentation and Filing of Application

The petition must be presented and filed as required by the local practice.

The application for certiorari must be presented by the party seeking the writ or by his counsel,⁷³ and, if so required, the petition, affidavit, and accompanying papers must be filed with the clerk or other designated officer⁷⁴ before the hearing,⁷⁵ or within the time prescribed therefor by law.⁷⁶ A petition not filed within the prescribed period is void,⁷⁷ and an attempt to answer before it was filed

Oath administered by adverse party

That petition against board of zoning appeals was verified by petitioner before his son, who was member of board of zoning appeals and one of defendants, was a mere irregularity and did not render petition void or deprive court of jurisdiction of proceeding.—Brewster v. Wendt, 274 N.Y.S. 428, 242 App.Div. 775.

Sufficient verification

(1) Under rule XVI section 2, affidavit on petition for certiorari should contain allegations that facts set forth are true and correct, but, where affidavit was accompanied by other proofs of compliance with the rule, affidavit, "to the best of affiant's knowledge and belief," is sufficient.—Kinchen v. A writ of certiorari would not be set aside because verified by applicant's attorney rather than by applicant, where applicant was absent from county where attorney resided and attorney was better informed relative to facts of matter stated in application and statute permits verification of pleadings by attorney in such cases.—Abell v. cannot give it life.⁷⁸ In at least one jurisdiction, however it is not required that the petition should be filed before the order for the issuance of the writ is made, for the writ may be allowed by the court or judge thereof, and it is competent to apply directly to the judge for the writ and afterward file with the clerk of the court the petition accompanied by the order for the writ.⁷⁹

The petition is construed against the petitioner.

Petition treated as amended

(1) A petition for writ of certiorari to a board of aldermen, "sitting as a board of canvassers," to quash its acceptance of the latter's official count of votes, was treated as if amended and directed to the board of aldermen sitting as such, where all interested parties joined issue on the merits.—Fortin v. "The petition for certiorari can not be amended, because the judge of the superior court has no jurisdiction to try any except the questions made in the petition as it stood when he sanctioned it."—Jones v. Gill, 48 S.E. 688, 689, 121 Ga. 93—Brumbelow Heating & Plumbing Co. v. Atlanta Furniture Co., supra.

Adjudication in bankruptcy

It is not permissible for a plaintiff in certiorari to file in the superior court a plea of bankruptcy setting up that, after the sanction of his petition for certiorari, and after the issuance of the writ, he was adjudicated a bankrupt, and thereafter discharged, and that the judgment under consideration in the certiorari proceeding was duly scheduled and became discharged by the discharge in bankruptcy of the plaintiff in certiorari.—Brumbelow Heating & Plumbing Co. v. Atlanta Furniture Co., 146 S.E. 639, 39 Ga.App. 72.

After reversal of judgment

Where superior court issued writ of certiorari, on hearing, annulled order of medical board revoking petitioner's license, and district court of appeal reversed judgment of superior court, superior court then properly refused to permit amendment of original petition for writ of certiorari or settle bill of exceptions,

a. Amendments

Although the application is not amendable in some states, in others amendments are permitted, subject to general rules as to amendments of pleadings.

In some states the petition is amendable,⁸¹ but even in such jurisdictions amendments should be granted with caution,⁸² and application therefor must be filed within the time prescribed by a controlling rule of court.⁸³ In other states it is held that the petition is not amendable,⁸⁴ and that aliunde proof is not admissible to correct material errors therein.⁸⁵ In any event, an amendment will not be granted if it will not render the petition sufficient to justify the writ.⁸⁶

A supplemental affidavit has been permitted to be filed for the purpose of explaining why the original was made by the attorney of the party, instead of by the party himself.⁸⁷

since no fact outside record of medical board was admissible before reviewing court for any purpose.—Rinaldo v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, 59 P.2d 868, 15 Cal.App.2d 585.

In Texas

(1) The rule of the text seems to be recognized.—Norris v. Rhodes, 25 Tex. 625—Gunter v. Jarvis, 25 Tex. 581, 583—Hall v. Davison, Civ.App., 176 S.W. 642—McBurnett v. Lampkin, 101 S.W. 864, 45 Tex.Civ.App. 567—11 C.J. p 154 note 85.

(2) Thus, under the statutory provision requiring the issues on certiorari to the county court to be confined to the grounds of error specified in the application, the court properly refused petitioner permission to file trial amendment presenting additional grounds.—Lee v. Benzes, Tex.Civ.App., 209 S.W. 768.

(3) However, the addition of a seal to the jurat by the officer who administered the oath to the petitioner has been allowed.—Hall v. Magale, 1 Tex.A.Civ.Cas. § 852.

(4) Furthermore an original application for certiorari setting up certain orders of sale and seeking to have them annulled was amended by an allegation that one of the orders alleged in the original application had not in fact been made; and it was held that such amendment was an abandonment of the cause of action for relief from that order.—Schwind v. Goodman, Tex.Com.App., 221 S.W. 579, reversing Goodman v. Schwind, Civ.App., 186 S.W. 282.

85. Ga.—Carroll v. Inner Shoe Tire Co., 94 S.E. 643, 21 Ga.App. 397.

86. Tex.—Oldham v. Sparks, 28 Tex. 425.

87. N.Y.—Dickson v. Seelye, 6 Johns. 327.

The general rules as to amendments of pleadings after limitations have run are applicable.⁸⁸ Thus an amendment to a petition may be allowed after the time to institute another proceeding has elapsed.⁸⁹

The applicant will not be precluded because of delay in moving to amend, where the respondent delayed the filing of the return, at which time the petitioner was first apprised of the insufficiency of his petition, and the respondent was not injured by the delay.⁹⁰

If an amendment is improperly allowed, the proper remedy is to move to quash the writ, and not to raise the question by an averment in the return.⁹¹

b. New Application

In a proper case a new application can be made after a futile attempt to obtain the writ.

It has been held that the right to the writ is not exhausted by a futile attempt to obtain one.⁹² Thus a new application for the writ may be entertained by the court where the prior application was denied merely because it was directed to the judge instead of to the court.⁹³

In Georgia a petition for certiorari is such a suit as can be renewed under the statutory provisions,⁹⁴ but a renewal is properly refused if the first petition for the writ⁹⁵ or the initial proceedings⁹⁶ are void, at least if not applied for within the statutory time.⁹⁷ A second petition for certiorari must show affirmatively that the first petition, which had been dismissed, was not a void suit, or that it was such a valid suit as could be renewed,⁹⁸ and that the former certiorari was not dismissed on the merits.⁹⁹

§ 84. Defects, Objections, and Waiver

Defects in the application may, in a proper case, be pointed out by motion or demurrer, and are waived by failure to make seasonable and specific objections.

Although irregularities in the presentation of the application for the writ may be sufficient, under ordinary circumstances, to authorize its denial, the court may nevertheless determine a question of the jurisdiction of an intermediate appellate court.¹ A motion to dismiss a petition for certiorari must be made at the earliest opportunity,² and objections to the application have been held to be too late where made after the writ had issued and return thereon;³ in a proper case, as shown infra § 135, it is generally held that the writ may be dismissed on motion because of defects therein. Rules of court relating to the form of petitions for certiorari will be enforced without the necessity of calling the court's attention to violations of them by motions to strike;⁴ and a petition which contains matter of a scandalous nature irrelevant to the questions raised, and which apparently is inserted for the sole purpose of reflecting on the integrity of the respondent will be stricken from the files.⁵

Demurrer. In some jurisdictions the writ is allowed on a petition ex parte, the only answer to the writ being the return, and no demurrer will lie for any defect in the petition.⁶ In others, however, the

What renders proceedings void

To render the certiorari void within the rule of the text, there must be something inherently defective in the petition, or proceedings; and failure in the answer sufficiently to verify the allegations contained in a petition for certiorari will render the proceedings subject to dismissal although the petition is not in itself so inherently defective as to be void.—*Morris v. Allowable latitude not transcended

Consideration of a petition to review the refusal of two judges of the lower court to recuse themselves will not be denied because the petition refers to the proceedings as "unheard of, absurd, and ridiculous" or because it states that such two judges took part in a discussion at which a movement for plaintiff's recall was "hatched." Such words did not transcend the allowable latitude, although more parliamentary terms might have been used without loss of effectiveness.—Johness v. Stoulig, 92 So. 187, 151 La. 618.

6. Or.—Fay v. City of Portland, 195 P. 828, 99 Or. 490.

sufficiency of the petition for a writ of certiorari may be tested by demurrer,⁷ and where it is the established practice for the court to hear the whole case on the petition the demurrer may be filed with, or in addition to, the record of the proceedings.⁸

A demurrer to an application for a writ of certiorari may, it has been held, be treated as an answer,⁹ and an objection to joining a demurrer with the answer may be met by considering the demurrer as a motion to quash on the ground that the petition, conceding it to be true, does not present a meritorious case for certiorari.¹⁰

A demurrer to the petition can be predicated only on matters appearing therein,¹¹ and it is not a ground that the petition is not sufficiently specific, the remedy in such a case being a motion to make more definite and certain.¹²

A demurrer admits the allegations of fact contained in the petition¹³ and in testing the sufficiency of the petition such allegations will be taken as true.¹⁴ The effect of the demurrer, it has been held, is to adopt as the return to the writ, the facts alleged in the petition.¹⁵ Where only such proceedings can be reviewed in certiorari, a general demurrer to the petition for a writ raises the question whether the proceedings sought to be reviewed are of a judicial character.¹⁶

In some jurisdictions, by rule of court, on overruling a demurrer to the petition, the writ will issue without leave to answer.¹⁷

Waiver. Defects or irregularities may be waived by failure to object seasonably¹⁸ or specifically to point out the defect;¹⁹ or, in some states, by filing an answer;²⁰ but the failure of the petitioner's affidavit to aver, as required by statute, that the petition was not filed for delay only will not be cured by the fact that the answer of the judicial officer whose judgment is challenged in the petition supports the allegations of the petition.²¹

§ 85. Notice of Application

When required by the local practice and not waived by the party entitled thereto, sufficient notice of the application or of intent to apply for the writ must be seasonably given.

The practice varies in the different states as to the necessity for notice of the application before issuance of the writ. Notice has been held necessary in some jurisdictions.²² In others, no notice is necessary,²³ while in still others the requirement of notice is discretionary with the court to whom the application is made.²⁴ In some jurisdictions a notice of an intention to apply for the writ is required.²⁵

Waiver. The right to notice may be waived²⁶ as by appearance and going to a hearing on the merits,²⁷ unless the statute requiring notice is peremptory;²⁸ but waiver by the judge alone does not affect the right of the adverse party who is also entitled to notice.²⁹

Time, sufficiency, and service. The notice, when required, must be served within the time fixed by law,³⁰ and a notice of intention to apply for the writ must be given before the application is made.³¹ So far as its form and contents are concerned, the notice must comply with the local requirements; and verbal notice is not sufficient under a rule requiring written notice,³² although it has been held that notice given in open court to the presiding judge and opposing attorney and recorded in the minutes of the court is a substantial compliance therewith.³³ In the absence of statute or rule so providing, the notice need not be accompanied by a copy of the petition or of the record below.³⁴ It may be served by any person,³⁵ and, it seems, on the attorney who represented the adverse party in the proceedings sought to be reviewed;³⁶ but merely giving notice to counsel for such adverse party is insufficient where notice to the judge and filing in the office of the clerk of the court is also required,³⁷ and it has been held that notice to show cause against the issuing of the writ must be given to the tribunal to which the writ, if granted, will be addressed, and that it is not sufficient to give notice merely to the adverse party before such tribunal.³⁸ It has also been held that it may be served in the same manner as an ordinary summons.³⁹ A requirement of proof of service means proof of delivery to the persons entitled to it, and mere proof of mailing is insufficient, especially where the date of mailing does not even appear.⁴⁰

§ 86. Answer to Application

While no answer to the application, as distinguished from an answer or return to the writ, is ordinarily required, this is not true where the practice of the court is to hear the whole case on the petition.

What is sometimes called an answer is merely, in effect, a return to the writ and where interposed after the issuance of the writ, it is governed by the rules relating to returns, whatever it may be called. Thus, in Georgia, the statute refers to the "answer" to the writ, but it is impossible to see wherein such "answer" is in anywise different from what is called the "return" in most of the other states. Such answer or return is considered in §§ 114-133 infra. In some states, however, an answer is filed to the petition, and that is what is herein treated.

No answer is necessary, if no provision therefor exists.⁴¹ An answer filed to an original petition will suffice as an answer to an amended petition which is substantially the same.⁴²

Practice in Maine, Massachusetts, and Vermont. In Massachusetts "the uniform practice of the court is to hear the whole case on the petition,"⁴³ and the reply or defense to the petition for the writ is called an answer. This answer must include the record, and may contain other necessary facts,⁴⁴ and also extrinsic facts to show that substantial justice does not require the granting of the writ.⁴⁵ This answer may controvert the extrinsic facts alleged in the petition or allege other facts which avoid their effect.⁴⁶ However, an answer is insufficient where it raises issues of fact only,⁴⁷ or merely sets forth such matters as are deemed available as a defense, without a copy of the record.⁴⁸ So matters which "may" occur should not be included.⁴⁹ Members of a board having custody and control of the record must answer jointly and not separately.⁵⁰

The answer, when it states any facts, is in the nature, not of an allegation of a party, but of an official return, conclusive in all matters of fact, and must be signed by the members of the tribunal, and not by an attorney.⁵¹ When a question of law only is intended to be raised on the allegations of the petition and the record annexed, an answer in the nature of a demurrer may be filed by attorney; but it must be the demurrer of the inferior officers or tribunal.⁵²

If extraneous facts are set up against the preliminary step of issuing the writ, the petitioner may answer them.⁵³

In Maine it is also the practice to hear the whole case on the petition for the writ, and the practice is for the respondent tribunal to file an answer under oath, setting out therein a copy of the record, and, if such record does not contain a full statement of the facts proved and the rulings thereon, so far as the points complained of in the petition are concerned, to supply such omissions in the answer; and such verified answer, being in the nature of a return, is conclusive in all matters of fact within its jurisdiction.⁵⁴ The practice here seems to be practically identical with that in Massachusetts.

In Vermont, as in Massachusetts and Maine, the practice also is to hear the merits of the case on the petition for the writ.⁵⁵ Where the hearing on the application for the writ is on the merits, the answer should embody the record where it is not sufficiently set forth in the petition.⁵⁶

Contents

A report of the evidence in support of the findings of fact in whole or in its different parts formed no proper part of return of respondents to a petition for a writ of certiorari to review abatement of assessment by county commissioners, would have been irregular, and would have been an unnecessary encumbrance of the record, and return was not demurrable because of its omission.—Inhabitants of Town of Westport v. County Com'rs of Bristol County, 141 N.E. 591, 246 Mass. 556.

Matters not in record

County commissioners can in their answer allege facts which were passed on by predecessors in entering order in controversy based on official information although such facts were not in record of board's proceedings.—Boston & M. R. R. v. County Com'rs of Middlesex County, 131 N.E. 283, 239 Mass. 127.

§ 87. Grounds for Resisting Application

The application may ordinarily be resisted on any ground showing that the case is not a proper one for the writ.

If notice is given, or an order to show cause is granted, the application may be resisted on the ground that the petition is insufficient, or that the court is without jurisdiction to issue the writ, or that there is an appeal, or a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, or any other ground, if there is one, showing that it is not a proper case for the writ.⁵⁷ So, in view of the rules stated supra §§ 10-16 and infra § 88 b, matters bearing on the exercise of the discretion of the court to grant or refuse the writ may be urged. It has been held, however, that whether the relator, a third person, has alleged sufficient interest to entitle him to prosecute the appeal, or whether he has failed to perfect it by giving notice are matters which should be presented in a motion to dismiss the appeal, and cannot be considered in disposing of the application.⁵⁸

§ 88. Hearing on Application

- a. Practice in general
- b. Matters dehors the record
- c. Presumptions and burden of proof
- d. Decision on hearing
- e. Rehearing

a. Practice in General

While the practice is not uniform in all jurisdictions, it is usual to allow or disallow the writ on inspection of the application.

Keeping in mind that what is here considered is the hearing on the application for the writ and not the hearing after the writ has been issued and the return made thereto, which is treated infra §§ 143-146, it may be stated that ordinarily the parties to be adversely affected do not appear and resist the issuance of the writ, and are not given an opportunity so to do; but after the writ has been issued they raise the objection that the case is not a proper one for the writ, or that the rules of procedure were not observed in procuring its issuance, by making a motion to supersede or quash the writ, which proceedings are treated in this Title infra §§ 134-142. The court usually allows the writ on an inspection of the petition or affidavit, and takes the same as true.⁵⁹ Counter affidavits, parol evidence, or even the record of the inferior tribunal, are not considered for the purpose of contradicting the petition or affidavit; and if the latter discloses merits the writ is allowed.⁶⁰ However, the court may hear the merits of the case on the petition and answer, may examine the record to determine the propriety of the proceedings below,⁶¹ or may await the return of the proceedings below, before taking any action on the merits,⁶² as where the petition is ex parte and presents a prima facie case,⁶³ but it has been held that questions of fact on which the jurisdiction depends will not be reviewed.⁶⁴

Consideration of record

(1) On petition for certiorari to review judgment of court of appeals, supreme court may consider record.—Southern Building & Loan Ass'n v. Holmes, 149 So. 861, 227 Ala. 1, granting certiorari and reversing 149 So. 859, 25 Ala.App. 499, certiorari denied 149 So. 862, 227 Ala. 254.

(2) The supreme court will not, on application for certiorari to review decision of court of appeals, look to facts shown by bills of exceptions.—Ex parte Whorton, 106 So. 344, 214 Ala. 68, denying certiorari Whorton v. State, 106 So. 344, 21 Ala.App. 15.

(3) Certiorari will not issue to review decision of court of appeals on question involving recourse to disputed evidence or facts not disclosed by opinion.—Box v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 168 So. 220, 232 Ala. 447, denying certiorari, App. 168 So. 209, reversed 168 So. 216, 232 Ala. 1 and 168 So. 217, 232 Ala. 321.—New York Life Ins. Co. v. Sinquefield, 163 So. 812, 231 Ala. 185, denying certiorari 163 So. 809, 26 Ala.App. 523.—Polytinsky v. Wilson, 111 So. 276, 215 Ala. 455, denying certiorari 111 So. 275, 21 Ala.App. 635.

(4) In an application for a writ of certiorari to review the affirmation by the circuit court of a judgment of the civil court of record, the court examines the petition and exhibits, not for the purpose of finally determining the questions presented, but only so far as is necessary to ascertain whether the petition and exhibits show prima facie that a question is presented that may properly be reviewed on certiorari in such cases.—American Ry. Express Co. v. Weatherford, 98 So. 820, 86 Fla. 626.

Matters previously adjudicated

Where plaintiff's application for review of a judgment of the court of appeals was rejected, and defendant's application allowed, the court will not pass a second time upon the matters included in plaintiff's application on the hearing on defendant's application.—Gastauer v. Gastauer, 94 So. 897, 152 La. 958.

Supreme court's inquiry is limited on application for writ of certiorari to review district court's judgment to questions whether application is proper and district court or judge exceeded its or his jurisdiction.—State ex rel. Murphy v. Second Judicial Dist. Court in and for Silver Bow County, 41 P.2d 1113, 99 Mont. 209.

Writ of review

Jurisdictional facts are not prop-

tion, the court may order a reference to ascertain disputed facts.⁶⁵

b. Matters Dehors the Record

Matters dehors the record may be considered in passing on the application in some jurisdictions, but not in others.

In several of the states it seems to be the practice to hear the merits of the case on the petition for the writ, and practically to decide the whole case on the granting or refusing of the writ, by allowing affidavits to be read, or other evidence received, dehors the record, to show that justice and equity do not require the granting of the writ,⁶⁶ although not to contradict the record,⁶⁷ and it has been held that, where the ground of the application is the loss of a right to appeal, the court may consider an oral and disputed agreement to waive the provisions of the statute.⁶⁸ In some jurisdictions, however, the court will look only to the face of the record.⁶⁹ Thus it is held that the court will not receive affidavits or parol evidence for the purpose of contradicting the petition, or consider an issue raised thereon.⁷⁰

erly contested by a proceeding for a writ of review, the function of such writ being to bring the proceedings in the inferior court, including the evidence, before the court.—Miller & Lux v. Board of Sup'rs of Madera County, 208 P. 304, 189 Cal. 254.

Allegations of fact in petition for certiorari, not supported by facts shown in return of respondent, and not passed on by single justice, must be disregarded.—Prusik v. Board of Appeal of Building Department of City of Boston, 160 N.E. 312, 262 Mass. 451.

Opposing affidavits may be read in some jurisdictions.

N.C.—Vervell v. Trexler, 5 N.C. 438—Ledbetter v. Lofton, 5 N.C. 184—11 C.J. p 158 note 68.

Where sufficiency of return is not questioned by petitioner, scope of inquiry was whether on face of return there were apparent errors of law of substantial nature requiring relief to prevent injustice.—Newcomb v. Aldermen of Holyoke, 171 N. E. 826, 271 Mass. 565.

In California

(1) The court to whom the petition is addressed may, it seems, in the exercise of its discretion, and for the purpose of determining whether or not, despite the irregularities complained of, injustice may be done by the issuance of the writ, resort to evidence from without the record sought to be reviewed.—Donovan v. Board of Police Com'rs of City and County of San Francisco, 163 P. 69, 32 Cal.App. 392.

(2) Thus the evidence given in the court below, as well as the record, may be examined.—McClatchy v. Sacramento County Super. Ct., 51 P. 696, 119 Cal. 413, 39 L.R.A. 691.

(3) The fact that defendants saw fit to make and file an answer to plaintiff's petition, unaccompanied by a return of the record, does not alter the situation.—Donovan v. Board of Police Com'rs of City and County of San Francisco, supra.

In Illinois extrinsic evidence may be heard.—Sampson v. Chestnut Tp. Highway Comrs., 115 Ill.App. 443.

67. Mass.—Charlestown v. Middlesex County, 109 Mass. 270—Mendon v. Worcester County, 5 Allen 13.

69. Ark.—Axley v. Hammock, 50 S. W.2d 608, 185 Ark. 939.

Tenn.—Gillespie v. Martin, 109 S.W. 2d 93.

Allegation as to bond

Where petition for certiorari alleges that bond was given as required by law and was duly sanctioned, and it does not affirmatively appear from the record that the allegation

When extrinsic evidence is introduced, on the hearing of the application for the writ, tending to show that substantial justice does not require proceedings to be quashed, then the petitioner may introduce like evidence in rebuttal.⁷¹

Renewal petition. Where reference is made in a renewal of a previously dismissed petition to the papers in the former certiorari on file in the same court in which the renewed certiorari is brought, the court in passing upon the truth of such averments relative to matter happening in the same superior court and subsequent to the trial in the court below may properly inspect the former record to verify the statements in the petition.⁷²

c. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

All material facts alleged and not put in issue are presumed true if not in conflict with the record; and the burden is on petitioner to establish his case and on the respondent to prove new matter set up in opposition.

All material facts alleged in the application for the writ are to be presumed true, where not denied or put in issue by an answer,⁷³ and all material was untrue, the court erred in dismissing the certiorari on the ground that bond and security had not been given.—Rice v. City of Moultrie, 73 S.E. 585, 10 Ga.App. 454.

Whether the evidence below was such as is required by Act No. 170 of 1898, § 66, as a basis for the issuance of a writ of possession, is a matter affecting the merits, and is to be decided after hearing the case on appeal, and hence cannot be considered on application for writs of certiorari and prohibition to bring up the record on appeal.—Zahn v. Unknown Owners, 98 So. 184, 154 La. 776.

70. Ind.—Citizens' St. R. Co. v. Heath, 55 N.E. 744, 154 Ind. 363.

Matters not before trial judge

On hearing of application to supreme court for writs of certiorari, prohibition, and mandamus to compel district judge to reduce amount of suspensive appeal bond, supreme court will not consider affidavits and statements attached to a supplemental petition.—Rosenthal-Brown Fur Co. v. Jones-Frere Fur Co., 103 So. 251, 157 La. 887.

71. Me.—Levant v. Penobscot County, 67 Me. 429.

Mass.—Ward v. Newton, 63 N.E. 1064, 181 Mass. 432.

73. Ga.—Walker v. Forehand, 86 S. E. 940, 17 Ga.App. 361. 11 C.J. p 158 note 76.

Show cause order

Upon the hearing on return to an facts alleged in the answer must be taken to be true,⁷⁴ except in so far as they conflict with the record.⁷⁵ It will not be presumed that the inferior court will exceed its jurisdiction.⁷⁶

The burden is on the petitioner to make out a clear case,⁷⁷ but if the respondent sets up new matter as a bar the burden is on him to prove such new matter.⁷⁸

d. Decision on Hearing

On the hearing of an application for a writ, the court decides merely whether to issue or refuse the writ.

On the hearing on the petition, the only question for the court to determine is whether in its discretion it will issue the writ,⁷⁹ and the same rule applies where the hearing is on the return of an order to show cause why the writ should not issue.⁸⁰ The court should order the writ to issue if the application discloses a prima facie case⁸¹ or a fairly debatable question,⁸² but if upon an examination of the petition the judge finds it insufficient, he should disallow the writ;⁸³ and the issuance of an order and notice to show cause does not prevent a refusal of the writ if a proper showing is not made.⁸⁴ A petition should not be dismissed on account of insufficient assignments of error, if it contains one sufficient assignment.⁸⁵ In some jurisdictions refusal to sanction the writ, where the evidence is sought to be reviewed, is proper where there is some evidence to support the findings;⁸⁶

order to show cause why a writ of review should not issue, the allegations of the petition are taken to be true.—Johnson v. Ensign, 224 P. 73, 38 Idaho 615.

Right to remedy

Where ultimate decision would be against petitioner, supreme court could state controlling substantive law without determining question of whether case was properly before it on petitions for mandamus and certiorari.—Sampson v. Treasurer and Receiver General, 184 N.E. 465, 282 Mass. 119.

Correct result

Where court of appeals gave erroneous reasons for judgment, but reached correct result, petition for writ of certiorari will be denied.—Missouri State Life Ins. Co. v. Hardin, 78 S.W.2d 832, 168 Tenn. 340.

Void petition must be dismissed.—Nilsen v. City of La Grange, 191 S.E. 175, 55 Ga.App. 676, transferred 189 S.E. 511, 183 Ga. 742—Richards v. Harvey, 129 S.E. 1, 34 Ga.App. 219—Partee v. Want of meritorious assignment

(1) Where a petition for certiorari to review a judgment of a city court contained no meritorious assignment of error, the refusal of the superior court to sanction the petition was not error.—Gulf Refining Co. v. Miller, 114 S.E. 227, 29 Ga.App. 71, transferred 108 S.E. 28, 151 Ga. 727.

(2) Thus a petition for certiorari, containing no assignment of error on final judgment, but only complaining of rulings on trial is properly refused.—Cain v. Jett, 157 S.E. 225, 42 Ga.App. 597.

(3) So exceptions to verdict and judgment in petition for certiorari on ground of alleged disqualification of certain jurors presented no question for consideration where they did not complain of any ruling of the trial judge.—Gulf Refining Co. v. Miller, supra.

but the petition should be sanctioned where the evidence demands a verdict for the petitioner.⁸⁷ Where the record of the respondents has been certified by them and included in their return to the petition, there is no occasion for the writ to issue to bring that record before the court.⁸⁸

The grant of leave for the writ to issue is not a judgment that the record below be quashed.⁸⁹ Furthermore, it seems that, if the writ is denied, it is improper to go further and to affirm the record sought to be quashed; and the denial of the writ will not have the effect of such an adjudication. In order that that adjudication be made, the writ must issue, and the record be attacked, before the court.⁹⁰ It has been held, however, that the rule that final judgment cannot be rendered where there is conflicting evidence on any material issue does not apply where the petition is overruled.⁹¹ The effect, under the stare decisis rule, of the refusal of the court of last resort to review a decision of a court of intermediate appeal by certiorari is considered in the C.J.S. title Courts § 198, also 15 C.J. p 923 notes 24-25.

Application for writ of certiorari to review jury finding on claim of property attached, on ground there was no evidence justifying finding that attachment debtor owned property, would be denied where there was ample evidence, particularly documentary evidence, supporting finding.—Moos v. O'Reilly, 173 A. 340, 12 N.J.Misc. 558.

Where the verdict and judgment were authorized under the law and the evidence, the trial judge did not err in overruling a certiorari.—Grove Mfg. Co. v. Salter, 106 S.E. 208, 26 Ga.App. 369.

Verdict wrongfully directed

Where evidence did not absolutely demand verdict directed for plaintiff, judge of superior court did not err in sustaining defendant's certiorari and granting new trial; petition for certiorari containing proper assignment of error on such direction of verdict.—J. J. Tolbert Estate, Inc., v. Kellis, 128 S.E. 204, 34 Ga. App. 49.

Questions not presented

Appellate court's refusal to issue certiorari was not adjudication on questions in record not presented to nor considered by appellate court. Thus it cannot be taken as an adjudication on right of party to have it, or on merits of controversy such as makes these questions res judicata.—State ex rel. Durafor Products Co. v. Percy, 29 S.W.2d 83, 325 Mo. 335.

Inapplicable statute

A statute providing that, whenever any judgment shall have been rendered in the supreme court which upon further consideration is found to have been erroneously entered, the judges thereof are authorized, during vacation, to change the same without ordering a rehearing thereof, by entering a proper judgment in said cause has no application to a motion to set aside an order denying an application for a writ of cergranted only for good cause and on application seasonably made.

A judgment refusing certiorari as a substitute for an appeal will not be vacated so as to enable the petitioner to present additional affidavits which by due diligence he might have procured before the case was heard.⁹² In the absence of statute or rule authorizing the procedure, it has been held that the court is without jurisdiction to set aside an order denying an application for a writ of certiorari on motion made after the term.⁹³

§ 89. Assignment of Errors

Assignment of error apart from the application is ordinarily not necessary, but if required must be specific and timely.

In the sense that the term is used in appellate procedure generally, as distinguished from an assignment in the application for the writ, which is treated supra § 72, no assignment of errors is ordinarily necessary;⁹⁴ and even though a statute requires that an assignment of errors accompanies the application for the writ, if such application clearly states the errors relied upon, it is not necessary to encumber the record by attaching to the application an assignment of errors;⁹⁵ the petition for the writ of certiorari for the reason that it applies only to cases where the judgment actually rendered by the court has not been properly entered by the clerk, and does not authorize a change of the judgment, but only of the erroneous entry of the judgment.—Unbehahn v. Fader, supra.

11 C.J. p 162 note 67.

Constitutional questions

In Alabama, although ordinarily the supreme court will review only questions presented by appropriate assignment of error, constitutional questions involved in a case before it for review will be considered whether or not raised or argued in the lower courts, provided the complaining party affords the essential data to advise the court in the premises.—Ex parte Hines, 87 So. 691, 205 Ala. 17, granting certiorari Hines v. McMillan, 87 So. 696, 17 Ala.App. 509.

In New Jersey it seems that the statute requires reasons to be filed by the prosecutor and that such reasons are separate from the application, and in effect an assignment of errors.—Brown v. Peterson, 38 N.J. Law 189—11 C.J. p 163 note 69.

95. La.—Haas v. Opelousas-St. Landry Bank & Trust Co., 119 So. 700, 167 La. 537, denying certiorari 119 So. 372, 9 La.App. 166.

tiorari may be regarded as in the nature of an assignment of errors, in the absence of any more formal assignment, after the record is returned.⁹⁶ However, as shown infra § 150, if by statute or the local practice, assignment of errors is required, failure to make a sufficient assignment will preclude consideration of the alleged error, at least in most jurisdictions.

Time for and sufficiency. The assignment, if required, must be made or filed within the time prescribed therefor,⁹⁷ but the time for filing may, it has been held, be extended without notice.⁹⁸ The assignment must specifically point out the particular error or errors relied on;⁹⁹ although it has been held that, if the alleged illegalities are apparent on the face of the record, a general reason assigned for reversal is sufficient.¹ On certiorari to review the decision of an appellate court, the assignments must be made to the decree of that court, and not to the decree of the chancellor who originally tried the case.²

Contradicting return. The return cannot be contradicted by an assignment of errors.³

Cross assignments. In some jurisdictions the practice of cross assignments of error has never been adopted, and the respondent on review by certiorari cannot assign adverse rulings, and thus secure a consideration thereof by the court.⁴ In such jurisdictions the relator in certiorari may alone complain of adverse rulings.⁵

D. BOND OR OTHER SECURITY AND PAYMENT OF COSTS OR FEES

§ 90. Necessity for Security

No bond is necessary unless required by statute or by the court in the exercise of its discretion.

In the absence of statute, no bond or recognizance is necessary, or at least the requirement of security is discretionary.⁶ So, as it is discretionary with the court, under the rules stated supra §§ 10-16, to issue or not to issue the writ, the court may, in the exercise of its discretion, and it is nearly always a proper exercise of discretion, impose the giving of a bond or recognizance for costs, and for the indemnification of defendant in certiorari, as the terms on which the writ shall be allowed; and in some states this has grown to be a settled, uniform practice.⁷ However, the general rule is that security is insisted on only when the insolvency of the party or his departure from the jurisdiction is apprehended.⁸

A bond, undertaking, or other security, when required by law, is a prerequisite to the issuance of the writ,⁹ and it is held that a writ issued in the

In Georgia

(1) It has been said that the filing of a bond or the making of a pauper affidavit is a condition precedent to an application for certiorari.—Nilssen v. City of La Grange, 191 S.E. 175, 55 Ga.App. 676, transferred 189 S.E. 511, 183 Ga. 742.—Clay v. City of La Grange, 189 S.E. 863, 55 Ga.App. 239.—E. H. Odum Bros. Co. v. Stovall, 112 S.E. 907, 28 Ga.App. 661.—Georgian Co. v. Sutton, 89 S.E. 601, 18 Ga.App. 507.

(2) Under this rule, refusal to sanction certiorari for failure to comply with the statute requiring such a bond is not error.—Chiles v. City of Atlanta, 179 S.E. 596, 51 Ga. App. 69.—Austin v. City of Newnan, 142 S.E. 304, 37 Ga.App. 821.

(3) In other cases it is said that filing such bond or making such affidavit is a condition precedent to the issuance of the writ.—Butters Mfg. Co. v. Starke, 169 S.E. 57, 46 Ga.App. 715.—Butters Mfg. Co. v. Fraley, 169 S.E. 55, 46 Ga.App. 712.—Souerby v. Orrell, 106 S.E. 211, 26 Ga.App. 369.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Monroe, 106 S.E. 209, 26 Ga. App. 332.—Abercrombie v. Gurley, 94 S.E. 606, 21 Ga.App. 389.—11 C.J. p 159 note 94 [e] (1).

(4) And it has been pointed out that the filing of the bond is a con-absence of the bond, undertaking, or other security required by statute is void.¹⁰

A nonresident applicant for the writ may be ruled to give security for costs, under statutes applicable to nonresident plaintiffs generally;¹¹ but it has been held that a statute providing that plaintiff may be ruled to give security for costs does not authorize a rule for costs at the instance of defendant, after the cause has been removed on the application of defendant.¹²

One or more bonds. While it has been held that it is improper to give but one bond to remove two cases tried at the same time,¹³ or cases between different parties on a writ sued out by one who was a defendant in each case,¹⁴ it has also been held that where the same defense exists to judgments obtained in a number of cases a single bond is unobjectionable.¹⁵

§ 91. — Application in Forma Pauperis

Where authorized by statute, a sufficient pauper's affidavit may be filed in lieu of the required bond.

It is sometimes provided by statute that no bond, recognizance, or security for costs shall be required

when the applicant for the writ shall make an affidavit of his inability, because of his property, to furnish the same; and, where this is the case, the writ may be issued without the giving of a bond where the applicant complies with the statutory provisions.¹⁶ However, a general statute enabling poor persons to prosecute or to defend suits free of costs, on affidavit of inability to pay the fees, has been held not applicable to certiorari, but only to such process as issued at the commencement of the suit.¹⁷ So, where a statute imperatively requires that no appeal shall be granted without security, and certiorari is issued as a substitute for an appeal, the writ cannot be prosecuted in forma pauperis.¹⁸ The application for leave to sue out the writ must contain sufficient information as to the applicant's poverty and the nature and extent of the claim to enable the court to exercise a sound discretion in the matter,¹⁹ and it has been held that the affidavit in forma pauperis is not amendable,²⁰ and cannot be made by an attorney.²¹ Furthermore, according to some authorities, if the affidavit does not substantially meet the requirements of the statute the writ is void.²² dition precedent only to the issuance of the writ, and not to the sanction of the petition for certiorari.—Gragg Lumber Co. v. Collins, 139 S.E. 84, 37 Ga.App. 76—Abercrombie v. Gurley, supra—11 C.J. p 159 note 94 [e].

(5) It has been held that the bond may be executed or obtained at any time within three months from the date of the judgment complained of, and before the duly sanctioned petition for certiorari is presented to the clerk of the superior court in order that the writ of certiorari may issue thereon.—Abercrombie v. Gurley, supra.

(6) Moreover, the certiorari is valid as respects any requirement as to the giving and filing of the bond, where a valid legally required bond is filed prior to the issuance of the writ, notwithstanding the bond attached to the petition may be invalid.—Gragg Lumber Co. v. Collins, supra.

(7) So, where a second petition for certiorari is presented to the judge of the superior court for sanction within six months after the dismissal of a first petition, and where it appears in the second petition, by the certificate of the clerk of the superior court incorporated therein, that the legally required certiorari bond, with the approval thereon of the magistrate whose decision was sought to be reviewed, was duly filed with the clerk of the superior court prior to the issuance of the writ of certiorari upon the first petition, although the bond attached to the first petition was invalid, in that it was not approved by the trial magistrate, it appears in the second petition for certiorari that the first petition was, in so far as the certiorari bond was concerned, a legal and valid petition.—Gragg Lumber Co. v. Collins, supra.

(8) Where a certiorari bond was insufficient because describing the obligee merely as M, administrator, with nothing to show who the actual principal was, the allowance of an amendment of the writ and answer of the trial judge properly to designate the defendant in certiorari as M, as administrator of G, did not give the superior court jurisdiction.—*Metropolitan Life Ins. § 92. Who May Take Security

The security may be taken by an officer authorized to receive it.

The security can be taken only by an officer duly authorized to receive it and not by one who has no authority in the premises.²³

§ 93. Form and Contents of Bond

The bond must substantially comply with the statutory requirements as to recitals and conditions, principal, obligee, amount of penalty, and sealing.

The bond is sufficient if it contains substantially the conditions which the statute requires; it need not be conditioned in the very words of the statute.²⁴ The bond should describe the judgment sought to be reviewed,²⁵ but this may be done by reference to the petition where the judgment is properly described therein;²⁶ and a slight inaccuracy as to the amount of the judgment is not fatal.²⁷ It should also recite from what court the writ was obtained, and be conditioned to perform the judgment of the reviewing court.²⁸ However, a condition to abide by the judgment of the court is equivalent to a condition to perform the judgment.²⁹ The obligee should be described with certainty.³⁰

The bond must be signed by the principal, the petitioner for certiorari.³¹ If there are two or more petitioners, not partners, it seems that all of them should sign the bond.³² An attorney at law may sign the bond, in some states;³³ and a statute requiring that, before certiorari shall issue, the party applying therefor, or his agent or attorney, shall give bond requires the bond to be given by the party himself, or by an agent authorized to represent him in that particular case, or by an attorney authorized by the party to give the bond.³⁴ Where executed by an attorney in fact, his authority should appear in the record.³⁵

The penalty named in the bond should be in an amount sufficient to satisfy the statutory requirements.³⁶ Thus, where the statute requires the bond to provide security for all future costs and eventual condemnation money payable to the adverse party, it must ordinarily do so,³⁷ but where there is no eventual condemnation money, and plaintiff in certiorari has paid the accrued costs, a bond covering all future costs substantially complies with the statute.³⁸

A requirement of a bond in double the amount in controversy is satisfied by a bond in double the amount of the judgment sought to be revised,³⁹ and it has been held that the writ should not be dismissed because the penalty of the bond is less than that prescribed by the order for the writ.⁴⁰

A seal is essential,⁴¹ unless its use has been dispensed with by statute.⁴²

§ 94. Sureties

The bond should ordinarily be signed by the sureties, the number and competency of whom is governed by the local practice.

Where the statute requires a party applying for certiorari to give bond and security, a bond not signed by any person or corporation as surety, but signed only by the principal, is insufficient.⁴³ The number of sureties, and who may be sureties, are matters of local practice. Ordinarily a surety on a claim bond cannot be a surety on a bond to obtain a review of the matter by certiorari.⁴⁴ If a rule of court forbids an attorney from becoming a surety, in harmony with the general rule stated in the title Attorney and Client § 45, a certiorari bond signed by an attorney as surety is not necessarily void, unless the rule of court or a statute so provides.⁴⁵ Statutory provisions as to exceptions to the sureties, and conditions precedent, must be followed.⁴⁶ If the name of the surety is signed by an attorney in fact, his authority must accompany the bond,⁴⁷ and if it does not do so, plaintiff in certiorari is properly refused permission to produce and file the power of attorney under which the attorney acted.⁴⁸

§ 95. Approval and Filing of Bond

The bond must be sufficiently approved by the proper officer and seasonably filed.

Under the law of some states the bond must be approved by the magistrate or judge of the court in which the case was originally tried before the issuance of the writ and failure to obtain such approval may render void the issuance of the writ,⁴⁹ although it has been held that approval of the bond need not precede the sanction of the petition for certiorari.⁵⁰ A certificate of the trial magistrate that the plaintiff has paid all costs accrued and given bond as required by law is not a sufficient substitute for the written approval required by law.⁵¹ So approval by the clerk of court⁵² or by a commercial notary public⁵³ is insufficient; and the judge of the court to which application for the writ is made has no power to approve the bond by way of amendment.⁵⁴ It will be sufficient, however, if the bond duly executed and approved is incorporated in the record,⁵⁵ and the return of a bond as part of the proceedings in the case by the judge in response to the writ is equivalent to an approval of the bond by the judge.⁵⁶ A bond which shows on its face that it was executed and approved before rendition of the judgment assigned as error in the certiorari proceeding is fatally defective.⁵⁷ A bond defective on its face is not made valid by the approval of the proper authority.⁵⁸ The trial judge's approval of a certiorari bond is not a final adjudication which cannot be reviewed on motion to dismiss the certiorari for lack of a proper certiorari bond.⁵⁹

Unless the bond is filed within the time prescribed by statute, the writ cannot legally issue.⁶⁰ If the bond properly executed is incorporated in the record, however, it will be taken to have been filed in time.⁶¹

§ 96. Defects, Objections, and Waiver

Mere irregularities will not invalidate a bond, and they can be corrected or waived, but the contrary is true of substantial defects.

A recognizance will not be invalidated by mere

Contemporaneously with petition

In Georgia, in certiorari proceeding in civil case, where no affidavit in forma pauperis is filed, the bond required must be filed at the same time when petition for certiorari is filed; otherwise, the writ must be dismissed on the hearing.—E. H. Odom Bros. Co. v. Stovall, 112 S.E. 907, 28 Ga.App. 661—Carroll v. Inner Shoe Tire Co., 94 S.E. 643, 21 Ga. App. 397.

irregularities⁶² which may be supplied by intentment;⁶³ and unless timely objection is taken the defect will be deemed waived.⁶⁴ Where, however, a writ was void because of failure to give a valid bond, the act of the agent who signed the bond could not be ratified, so as to render the void proceeding valid or affect the rights of the other party who had moved to dismiss the writ before the ratification.⁶⁵

A bond or the like which is defective because of irregularities is amendable,⁶⁶ or the defects may be cured by the substitution of a new bond;⁶⁷ but if the defect is substantial, in the absence of statutory authority therefor there can be no amendment⁶⁸ or new bond.⁶⁹ Under some circumstances, and where the applicant is not at fault, the omission of a bond may be supplied in the reviewing court.⁷⁰

§ 97. Liabilities on Bonds

Liability on the bond depends on the conditions thereof and the result of the certiorari proceedings.

A condition that the proceeding shall be prosecuted in the court above contemplates that it shall be prosecuted or followed up to a conclusion.⁷¹ Hence, if the certiorari is dismissed because of failure to prosecute it according to the rules and practice of the court, the condition is broken,⁷² but not if the dismissal is because the bond is void;⁷³ nor is it a defense that the writ was not allowed, where the principal had the benefit of a hearing and determination thereon.⁷⁴ However, a condition to prosecute with effect, or to perform the judgment rendered in the cause, is not broken by the dismissal of the writ for informality in granting it⁷⁵ or for failure to comply with a rule requiring better security;⁷⁶ nor is the unsuccessful determination of present proceedings a breach of a condition to pay such costs and damages as may be recovered in any action thereafter brought.⁷⁷ A bond, given to stay the enforcement of a judgment pending a hearing upon certiorari, will be construed in the light of the circumstances, its purpose, and the statute authorizing it.⁷⁸

Where the writ is issued by a court which has no jurisdiction to issue it, judgment cannot be rendered on the bond, as it is an obligation which is not authorized by statute.⁷⁹

Extent of liability. A condition to abide by the judgment binds the surety to perform it and pay the sum recovered,⁸⁰ but the liability extends only to the amount of the penalty.⁸¹ A condition to pay damages and costs does not obligate the surety to pay the debt.⁸² So the sureties on a supersedeas bond are not liable for receivership expenses not incurred because of the writs.⁸³ An obligation by one to whom a judgment has been paid to restore, on reversal, the debt or damages for which the judgment was obtained, and costs, imposes no liability for the costs of reversal.⁸⁴

In determining whether the conditions of the bond have or have not been performed, and the extent of the obligation of the makers, the bond itself is to be looked to, and not the statutory requirements as to what the bond should contain, unless the bond is made in compliance with the statute.⁸⁵

As between surety on bond for writ and surety on appeal bond. As between the surety on a bond to procure the writ and the surety on appeal from the determination thereon the latter is primarily liable.⁸⁶

Release or discharge from liability. There is no liability on the bond if the party giving it is successful,⁸⁷ or the writ is dismissed for want of jurisdiction,⁸⁸ or is dismissed and the costs paid because of the election of the relator to appeal.⁸⁹ A statute permitting sureties for the prosecution or defense of any suit to obtain a release by requiring plaintiff to give counter security applies in favor of sureties on certiorari without regard to the status of the party.⁹⁰

Judgment. The court should not render summary judgment against the sureties unless it is authorized by statute so to do,⁹¹ but a summary judgment is proper where there is a statute conferring such power.⁹² So, where the practice is permitted by statute, judgment may be rendered against the principal and the surety at the same time⁹³ or on a new trial.⁹⁴ In a suit on a certiorari bond given by defendant in bail trover to obtain review of the bail trover action, where the property recovered therein, has not been produced to answer the judgment, the value of such property must be ascertained by proof.⁹⁵ A judgment in excess of the penalty may be amended on motion in the court below or in the appellate court.⁹⁶

A scire facias will not lie on a certiorari bond, unless directed by statute.⁹⁷

§ 98. Payment of Costs or Fees

Costs and fees must be paid and a certificate to that effect produced when required by statute or local practice as a condition precedent to issuance of the writ.

Although the certiorari statute is silent as to fees, the clerk of court is not required to annex a transcript in returning a writ of certiorari directed to the court unless the petitioner in serving the writ upon the clerk pays the fees prescribed by general law for the making of the transcript.⁹⁸ Furthermore, the cost of preparing a certified transcript of the record required to be attached to the petition for certiorari is not such an item of costs as will be relieved by a pauper's affidavit, but is merely an expense incident to the preparation of the application.⁹⁹ Statutes requiring the payment of fees in certain certiorari proceedings, or to certain persons, do not, however, require such payment in other certiorari proceedings or to other persons.¹

Where it is provided that before the writ shall issue the applicant shall produce and file with the petition a certificate from the officer whose decision or judgment is the subject matter of complaint, that all costs which may have accrued on the trial below have been paid, the failure to produce and file such a certificate will preclude right to the writ,²

"If a certiorari, after being sanctioned by the judge of the superior court, be dismissed on the hearing before him for the reason that it does not properly appear that the cost has been paid, the judgment dismissing it is equivalent to holding that the proceeding is void, and, there being no legal writ before him, the court is therefore without jurisdiction to entertain the proceeding, for the purpose of rendering its own final decision in the case, including judgment against the surety on the certiorari bond. But, since a judgment is thus rendered upon the question of the validity of the certiorari, the surety is liable together with his principal for the cost of that proceeding.—Ray v. Cruce, 94 S.E. 399, 21 Ga.App. 539.

Fees payable to judge or clerk

A statute requiring payment of fees to judge or clerk for making return to certiorari order has no application to a board or body, such as town board of zoning appeals, whose determination is sought to be reviewed.—Brewster v. Wendt, supra.

Orders substituted for writs

Provisions as to payment of fees for making returns in section of civil practice act relating to writs of habeas corpus and certiorari to inquire into cause of detention are not applicable generally to orders substituted for other state writs, such as certiorari order to review action of town board of zoning appeals.—Brewster v. Wendt, 279 N.Y.S. 291, 244 App.Div. 489.

11 C.J. p 148 note 2.

Time for obtaining and filing

The certificate as to payment of costs in civil cases as prerequisites to writ of certiorari may, it has been held, be executed or obtained at any time within three months after judgment and before sanctioned petition is presented to clerk of superior and so will the failure to pay the costs³ even though such a certificate is produced.⁴ The statute contemplates the costs which have accrued on the trial which resulted in the verdict or judgment with which the applicant is dissatisfied, and to which he excepts, and the certificate should have reference to the case as thus tried, and not to the case as made by the petition for certiorari.⁵ Moreover, a certificate made by the clerk of the court rendering the adverse decision does not comply with the positive requirements of the statute.⁶ While a certificate will be deemed sufficient when upon a fair interpretation it substantially meets the requirements of the statute,⁷ it is insufficient when it does not speak the truth⁸ or when it is so drawn that to uphold it would have the effect, by construction, of rendering the meaning of the law in respect thereto vague and uncertain.⁹ So a certificate which shows that some of the costs were unpaid does not satisfy the mandatory provision of the statute.¹⁰ While the requirement of payment of costs as a condition precedent to the issuance of a writ of certiorari is primarily for the protection of the officers of the court, a party to the case may challenge the right of the other party to proceed without such proof.¹¹

E. THE WRIT

§ 99. Necessity for

Issuance of a writ of certiorari is necessary to the jurisdiction of the reviewing court, unless in a proper case issuance may be and has been waived.

The issuance of the writ, unless waived by the parties, is necessary to confer jurisdiction on the reviewing court, and no review will be undertaken until the writ has been issued or waived; and it is not sufficient simply that the writ has been granted and ordered to be issued.¹² Even when there is a transcript of the record attached to the petition for the writ, it is necessary that the writ should issue.¹³

The issuance of the writ may be waived by the parties, by expressly stipulating that the writ need not issue, or by appearing and proceeding to a hearing without objection.¹⁴ It has also been held that, where a certiorari has been granted by a court without jurisdiction, the parties may agree to transfer the proceeding to the proper tribunal with the like effect as if it had been commenced in the latter court originally.¹⁵

§ 100. Duty of Applicant to Prepare

The applicant should prepare the writ.

It is the duty, not of the judge, but of applicant, to prepare the writ, and present it along with the affidavit for the writ.¹⁶ The attorney preparing the writ need not be the attorney who represented applicant in the court below.¹⁷

§ 101. Number of Writs

Different parts of the same proceeding may be brought up by one writ, but to review distinct determinations involving different interests or different parties, or official acts of different boards or officers not forming one official act, separate writs are necessary.

A writ is not multifarious because it brings up different parts of the same proceedings;¹⁸ but dis-court that return may issue thereon.—Abercrombie v. Gurley, 94 S.E. 606, 21 Ga.App. 389—11 C.J. p 148 note 2 [b], [c].

Application for second writ

(1) In procuring a second writ of certiorari after a first writ in the same case has been dismissed, the second being a renewal of the first, it is not ordinarily necessary to produce or to file a new certificate as to the payment of costs.—Standard Gas Products Co. v. Vismor, 121 S.E. 854, 31 Ga.App. 418—11 C.J. p 148 note 2 [e].

tinct determinations¹⁹ involving different rights and interests, or in which the parties to the record are not the same, so that one judgment cannot be rendered, cannot be brought up by the same writ.²⁰

Where a return is sought of the records of the official acts of different officers, and their several acts do not form parts of one entire official act, it is proper to issue a separate writ to each officer whose act contributes to the completion of the proceeding complained of.²¹

§ 102. Allowance and Issuance

- a. Necessity
- b. Who may allow
- c. Order allowing writ
- d. Effect of allowance

a. Necessity

Except where the writ may issue of course, it must be issued by the court or, when issued by a duly authorized officer, must be allowed by the proper court or judge.

Except where the writ may issue of course,²² as where it is applied for by the attorney-general of the state,²³ the writ must be issued by the court or, when issued by the clerk or other duly authorized officer,²⁴ must be allowed by the proper court or judge.²⁵ A writ issued by authority of a judge is of the same effect as if issued by the judge himself.²⁶

b. Who May Allow

The writ may be allowed only by the court in which the proceedings are to be brought, or by a judge or officer thereof acting within his jurisdiction.

Only the court in which the proceedings are to be brought, or a judge, or an officer thereof, acting within his jurisdiction may allow the writ.²⁷ As stated in C.J.S. title Judges § 48, also 33 C.J. p 968 notes 100-102, the writ may be issued by a judge at chambers or in vacation. An allowance by a judge disqualified by relationship is a nullity.²⁸ Where exclusive power to issue the writ is conferred by the constitution on the superior court, a statute authorizing a judge of an inferior court to grant the writ is unconstitutional.²⁹ Likewise, if commissioners have power to act only as to matters within their county, they cannot allow the writ where they do not reside within the county in which the judgment sought to be reviewed was rendered.³⁰

c. Order Allowing Writ

The sanction to the issuance of the writ is usually by indorsement on the petition or affidavit, or on the writ itself. The order must be in proper form, but need not prescribe the manner of service where this is controlled by statute.

The sanction of the court to the issuance of the writ is usually given by indorsement by the judge of an allocatur or fiat on the petition or affidavit, or on the writ itself.³¹ If a rule or order is entered, it must properly designate the parties.³² Failure to enter the allowance of the writ on the minutes of the court does not invalidate the writ.³³

Where the manner of service of the writ is prescribed by law, the order for its issuance need not prescribe the manner of its service nor recite the statute applicable thereto.³⁴

Imposing conditions. In granting the writ, the court has no authority to extend its operations,³⁵ or to change or alter the determination which is to be reviewed.³⁶ The court may, however, as a condition of granting the writ in matters of public importance, require prompt preparation and argu-

Revoking allowance. The allowance of the writ may be revoked.³⁹

d. Effect of Allowance

The allowance of the writ is not an adjudication of the merits involved.

The allowance of the writ is not an adjudication that there is illegality or that the party seeking the writ is entitled to it, and the granting of the writ does not even make a prima facie case.⁴⁰

Where proceedings to dismiss or dissolve a garnishment must be taken in the court where the suit is pending, the superior court has no original jurisdiction to dismiss or dissolve a garnishment, even though a writ of certiorari has been granted from proceedings in the suit, where plaintiff is not attempting to enforce the judgment pending determination of the certiorari,⁴¹ as the granting of the writ does not transfer the entire case to the superior court.⁴²

§ 103. Effect of Failure to Take Out after Allowance

The right to the writ may be lost by failure to take out the writ after its allowance.

Neglect to take out the writ within a reasonable time after its allowance will preclude the right to it.⁴³

§ 104. Form and Contents of Writ

a. In general

b. Title

c. The mandate

d. Signature, seal and teste; revenue stamps

e. Indorsement

a. In General

The writ should be in proper form, dated, showing the cause of complaint when necessary, and the interest of the prosecutor. In the absence of prejudice, it will be liberally construed.

The writ, it would seem, should set forth the names of the parties aggrieved, and the irregularities of which they complain,⁴⁴ setting out the cause of complaint,⁴⁵ unless this is made unnecessary by the terms of a particular statute.⁴⁶ The writ should also be dated,⁴⁷ and must show that the prosecutor is an interested party.⁴⁸

It is not necessary that the writ contain all the allegations of the petition,⁴⁹ nor the recitals of the application.⁵⁰ Failure of the writ to include a clause commanding the parties obtaining the judgment sought to be reviewed to appear before the court issuing it, does not affect its efficacy to remove the cause, nor the jurisdiction conferred.⁵¹

The fact that the form of the writ is erroneous is not fatal where, in response to it, defendant brings for review all facts before the court which were considered.⁵²

Where no prejudice has resulted from informalities in statements in a petition for certiorari and in the writ, the writ will be liberally construed and not held to the standard of precision of formal pleadings in actions at law and suits in equity.⁵³

The title of the writ should state the names of the parties.

The names of the parties should be stated in the title of the writ,⁵⁴ applicant being named as plaintiff, and the persons interested in maintaining the proceedings, as defendants. A writ running in the name of the state, directed to the proper parties, and reciting the presentation of the affidavit on which it was granted, is not invalidated by the omission of the title.⁵⁵

c. The Mandate

- (1) In general
- (2) Direction as to time and place of return

(1) In General

The writ should inform the lower tribunal that it is required to make a return; and the command of the writ is regulated in consonance with the purpose sought to be accomplished.

The writ should apprise the court or tribunal to which it is directed that such court or tribunal is required to make a return of its record,⁵⁶ and should properly describe the papers and records of which a return is desired.⁵⁷ The command of the writ may be regulated in consonance with the purpose sought to be accomplished, and may be such that it will bring up from the inferior tribunal only so much of the record as is necessary for the determination of the questions at issue by the reviewing court.⁵⁸ Failure to command a certification of the facts required will not be prejudicial if the material facts are certified.⁵⁹

The mandate must be liberally construed,⁶⁰ and vagueness in the command may be disregarded if the recitals of the writ express the desire of the court to be certified of matters specified.⁶¹

(2) Direction as to Time and Place of Return

In the absence of statute or rule of court the writ is made returnable to the court out of which it issued, at the time specified in the writ.

In the absence of statute or express rule on the subject,⁶² the writ, as a matter of course, is made returnable to the court out of which it issued, and to the judicial district or department in which the proceeding to be reviewed was had,⁶³ and to the branch or part of the court designated by rule of court,⁶⁴ and it must state the time within which it is to be returned.⁶⁵ The time for the return may be fixed by the court.⁶⁶ In a jurisdiction in which the court issuing the writ has no rule day, the writ should not be made returnable to such a day.⁶⁷

The writ should be signed, sealed, and properly attested; it is not original process within the meaning of a statute requiring stamps.

The writ should be sealed⁶⁸ and properly attested;⁶⁹ but it has been held sufficient that the writ be attested and sealed by the clerk of the court without being attested in the name of the judge.⁷⁰

A writ signed in the name of the clerk of court and sealed with a common seal by the attorney suing it out is, where such is a long established practice, as operative as if signed and sealed in the clerk's office.⁷¹

A writ of certiorari has been held not to be original process within the meaning of an act of congress requiring the stamping of "writs or other original process by which a suit is commenced."⁷²

e. Indorsement

A writ brought in the name of the state must show the name of the prosecutor, by indorsement or otherwise; and generally the allowance of the writ is indorsed thereon.

When brought and prosecuted in the name of the state, the name of the prosecutor in the writ must appear by indorsement on the writ or otherwise.⁷³ Generally, the allowance of the writ is indorsed

§ 105. To Whom Directed

- a. In general
- b. Effect of misdirection of writ

a. In General

The writ should be directed to named parties defendant or respondent, and should be addressed to the officer or tribunal having custody of the record sought to be reviewed.

The writ is to be directed to named parties defendant or respondent,⁷⁶ and should, since the object of the writ is to procure the transmission by an inferior tribunal of its record, or a copy thereof, to the court out of which the writ issues, for the purpose of enabling the latter court to inspect such record, be directed to the court, tribunal, board, or officer that is in legal contemplation of the custodian of such record.⁷⁷ So, the writ should be directed to the person or persons whose acts are the subject of review,⁷⁸ or whose return is necessary to enable the court to determine the validity or regularity of the proceedings below.⁷⁹

Where no command is made as to them, the writ is not invalidated by the insertion in the body thereof of the names of interested persons.⁸⁰

Recording officers. When the record of the inferior tribunal's proceedings is transmitted to the county clerk for the purpose of recordation among the county's records, and the inferior tribunal remains, notwithstanding such recordation, the actual and legal custodian of the record, the writ should not be directed to the county clerk, but to the tribunal or board whose proceedings are to be reviewed.⁸¹

So, where the clerk of a city or town, although he has charge of the records of the city or town, is not the legal custodian thereof, but has custody merely as agent of the city or town, the writ should not be directed to him, but to the common council of the city or to the town.⁸² Where the review is sought of a record of a court which has been abolished, the writ is properly directed to the clerk of the court having legal custody of the records of the abolished court.⁸³

Inferior courts. When a judge has acted as the presiding officer of a court, and the action to be reviewed is that of the court, and not that of the judge acting officially out of court by virtue of his office, it has been held that the writ should be directed to the court, and not to the judge,⁸⁴ although, where the court has but one judge, and he has direction and control of the record, the writ may without prejudicial error be directed to him;⁸⁵ but if the proceeding was had before the judge as an officer it is properly directed to him.⁸⁶ If it is sought not only to revise the proceedings of inferior tribunals, but also to assail rights acquired by their action, the writ may be directed to persons claiming such rights.⁸⁷

Clerk of court. It follows from what has been said as to the direction of the writ to the court or judge that it should not be directed to the clerk; but authority for such practice is not wanting where the court is a court of record.⁸⁸

Judges. Where the writ is directed to a judge it is not sufficient to state merely his official title, but his individual name should be given also.⁸⁹

Court-martial. A certiorari to review the determination of a court-martial should be directed to the president of the court.⁹⁰

Municipal boards and officers. Where the writ is sought to review the action of a municipal body or of municipal officers, it should be directed to the body or officers and not to a mere subordinate officer, although he may be in actual possession of the record,⁹¹ nor to the municipality.⁹² However, in a certiorari to review a budget adopted by a city, it has been held immaterial that the writ was directed to the city instead of the city clerk.⁹³ The writ should be directed to an official body in the individual names of its members, adding the name of their office.⁹⁴ If the direction states the corporate name of a public body with such sufficient accuracy as to leave no doubt of its identity, misnomer will not invalidate the writ.⁹⁵

A writ cannot properly be directed to several officers who perform several acts for a common purpose,⁹⁶ or to officers having no joint or common duties but acting independently of each other;⁹⁷ but separate writs must run to each to bring up the particular matters with which each respectively is concerned.⁹⁸

Officer whose term has expired. The writ should not be directed to an officer whose term of office has expired, when the office is a continuing one and the records remain in the office in the custody of the incumbent.⁹⁹ There are decisions, however, which hold that the writ is properly addressed to an officer whose term has expired, but who is able to make a valid return;¹ but it would seem that the writ should be directed to an officer whose term of office has expired only when a return is sought of matters that are not regularly kept of record in the office.²

Effect of loss of control over record. Where the inferior tribunal has transmitted its record to another tribunal, the writ should be directed to the tribunal having custody of the record at the time of the issuance of the writ.³

b. Effect of Misdirection of Writ

Misdirection may invalidate the writ, in whole or in part, unless amended or unless the defect is waived.

A writ may be invalidated by a misdirection,⁴ so that nothing can be removed by it,⁵ in which case, as seen in § 135, it should be superseded or quashed, unless an amendment is allowed, infra § 106; and this is so, although the parties to whom the writ is improperly directed attempt to make a return;⁶ but the objection is available to the adverse party alone.⁷

Where the writ is directed to proper parties and also to improper parties, it should not be superseded or quashed in toto. The practice is to supersede or quash the writ as to the parties improperly joined, or, on motion, to strike out such improper parties.⁸

Waiver of objections. Misdirection may be waived,⁹ as by making a proper return¹⁰ or submitting to a hearing on the merits.¹¹ Thus, where the proper officer having the keeping of the record makes return to the writ, the misdirection is waived, and the writ should not be superseded or quashed, at least on the motion of third persons.¹² So, after appearance and return, a misnomer of the officer to whom the writ is directed should be disregarded.¹³

Various formal defects, which relate to the form and contents of the writ, have been considered in § 104, and defects in the direction of the writ have been discussed in § 105, from the viewpoint of the propriety of the direction. Defects in the writ should be taken advantage of by motion¹⁴ or by application to supersede, the latter of which may be made before the filing of the return.¹⁵ Although issuance of the writ by the clerk instead of the court is irregular, such irregularity may be waived by the adoption or recognition of the writ throughout the proceedings by the parties and the court.¹⁶

b. Amendments

Formal defects in the writ may be cured by amendment.

Formal defects in the writ may be amended,¹⁷ as where the writ has improperly been entitled or indorsed,¹⁸ and when necessary it may be amended by supplying an omitted title,¹⁹ or correcting errors in the designation of the parties,²⁰ in the name of the party to whom the writ is directed,²¹ or in the time when,²² or designation of the place where, the writ is returnable;²³ by striking out that which relates to matters improperly required to be returned;²⁴ by correctly showing the nature of the action below;²⁵ by substituting a proper,²⁶ or supplying an omitted,²⁷ seal; by adding the sanction of the judge who granted it;²⁸ and by inserting the date,²⁹ or correcting the error of the clerk as to the date,³⁰ of the teste. An amendment may be permitted, although a term elapses between the teste and the return.³¹ So, in a proper case, an amendment may be allowed nunc pro tunc.³²

§ 107. Service

- a. In general
- b. Mode of service
- c. Appending other papers
- d. Objections and waiver thereof

a. In General

In general the writ must be served, on or before the return day, and within the time fixed by statute.

In most jurisdictions the writ, when granted, must be served.³³ The service must be made on or before the return day,³⁴ and within the time required by statute.³⁵ The delivery of a writ lawfully issued, after verdict, but before judgment is entered, will not vitiate it or prevent its subsequent operation.³⁶

Where the statutes so permit, the time for service may be extended.³⁷

b. Mode of Service

Service of the writ is by delivery to the person to whom directed by a proper officer.

The writ should be served by delivery, to the person to whom it is directed,³⁸ of the original writ

c. Appending Other Papers

Pertinent papers may be appended to the writ and served therewith.

It is proper to append to the writ and to serve therewith the papers on which it was granted, to inform the person served of the nature of the return required of him;⁵⁰ but the failure so to do will not excuse a proper return of that for which the writ plainly calls.⁵¹ A copy of the order of allowance should be served with the writ, or at least the writ should have the allowance indorsed thereon.⁵²

The petition for the writ need not, it is held in New York, be served on the officer to whom it is directed, in the absence of any statutory requirement to that effect,⁵³ but the contrary is held in Michigan.⁵⁴

d. Objections and Waiver Thereof

Defective service may be objected to by motion to supersede. Failure to serve in time is ground for dismissal. Defective service may be waived.

It has been held that the proper remedy for an improper service is to move to supersede the writ. A motion to quash in the absence of a return is irregular.⁵⁵ Failure to serve the writ in due time, where required by statute, has been a ground for dismissal.⁵⁶ However, a defective service is waived by appearance and response to the writ.⁵⁷

§ 108. Writ as Stay

- a. General Rule
- b. Statutory Provisions
- c. Security

a. General Rule

The writ of certiorari takes the record out of the custody of the inferior tribunal, leaves nothing there to be prosecuted or enforced by execution, and operates as a stay of execution in the absence of any statute modifying or abrogating the common-law rule.

At common law, the writ of certiorari takes the record out of the custody of the inferior tribunal, and leaves nothing there to be prosecuted or enforced by execution, and thus, ipso facto, operates as a stay of execution.⁵⁸ This rule has been brought down to modern times and prevails universally except where it has been abrogated or modified by statute.⁵⁹

Where, under the terms of a statute an appeal from an interlocutory order does not of itself operate as a stay of further proceedings, the issuance of a writ of certiorari to review an order of an appellate court rendered on an appeal from such an interlocutory order will not effect a stay of further proceedings in the lower court.⁶⁰

The powers of the inferior tribunal are none the less suspended after the service of the writ because, in fact, a transcript of the record, instead of the original, has been sent up.⁶¹

Special clause in the writ. Although the certiorari of itself operates as a supersedeas, it is nevertheless proper to insert a special clause in the writ directing it to operate as a supersedeas.⁶²

b. Statutory Provisions

In some states by statute the writ does not effect a stay, but the court may grant a stay, or, where the statute so provides a writ of supersedeas in aid of the certiorari may be issued on proper application.

While in some states the common-law rule that the writ operates as a stay is reiterated by statute, in others, by statute, the writ does not operate as a stay, but the court granting the writ is authorized to direct a stay,⁶³ and the mere filing of a petition and superior court did not accept service of writ.—Collins v. Powell, Iowa, 277 N.W. 477.

election under Act April 25, 1911, P. L. p 462, and Act April 7, 1914, P.L. p 170, relating to commission form of government on the ground the acts were unconstitutional, does not suspend the working of the acts so as to prevent the commissioners from becoming the governing body of the city.—Devlin v. Wilson, 96 A. 42, 88 N.J.Law 180.

Superior Court for King County*, 163 P. 765, 95 Wash. 258.

Boykin*, 187 S.E. 271, 54 Ga.App. 158, conforming to Boykin v. McRae, 185 S.E. 246, 182 Ga. 252, reversing McRae v. Boykin, 179 S.E. 535, 50 Ga.App. 866.

In federal courts

A writ of certiorari from the supreme court of the United States to a circuit court of appeals to review an order of that court entered on an appeal from an interlocutory order in the district court appointing a receiver does not stay further proceedings in the district court, since the appeal from its order did not, under the statute, so operate; but, the district court may, of its own motion, suspend further proceedings pending the decision of the supreme court on the certiorari.—Hanssen v. Pusey & Jones Co., D.C.Del., 286 F. 707, petition for rehearing and intervention denied *Wenborne-Karpen Dryer Co. v. Certiorari to review public utility commissioners' order, requiring railroad to build underpass, does not carry stay ex proprio vigore.—Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Board of Public Utility Com'rs, 137 A. 442, 5 N.J. Misc. 559.

Grant or denial

(1) Under Code Civ.Proc. § 2131, giving court granting writ of certiorari discretionary power to stay execution of determination to be reviewed, public service commission's for certiorari will not operate as a stay where a statutory provision requires a writ of supersedeas in aid of the certiorari where a stay is desired.⁶⁴ Under such a provision the writ of supersedeas in aid of certiorari must be applied for after reasonable notice to the adverse party, and may be applied for with the petition for certiorari or separately; but if made separately the petition for supersedeas should show an intent to file a petition for certiorari within the time allowed. On such application the writ of supersedeas will ordinarily issue on terms or bond prescribed,⁶⁵ and when issued operates to vacate the judgment under review.⁶⁶

The issuance of a statutory writ of certiorari in Alabama has the effect of annulling the judgment of the inferior court and removing the cause to the higher court to be tried de novo with all the proceedings before the issuance of the writ intact.⁶⁷

c. Security

In some jurisdictions to effect a stay security is or may be required.

It has been held in Pennsylvania that, where the writ is in substance a writ of error, it will not operate as a supersedeas, unless bail is given.⁶⁸ So, in Iowa the court or judge granting the writ can require a bond.⁶⁹

On certiorari, to review a proceeding to extend time for redemption from foreclosure, plaintiff may be required to file a supersedeas bond or pay the clerk of the lower court the monthly payments required to be paid defendant as a condition for extension in default of the bond.⁷⁰

§ 109. Commencement and Termination of Stay

The writ operates as a stay when, and not until, it is delivered to the one to whom directed. Duration of the stay may be fixed by statute, and in some instances continues until the cause is remitted or the supersedeas discharged.

The writ takes effect as a supersedeas on its being delivered to the officer to whom it is directed.⁷¹ It follows that mere notice of a petition for the writ does not operate as a supersedeas,⁷² and that the mere recital in a supersedeas of a certiorari is insufficient to suspend the proceedings.⁷³ When the duration of a stay is fixed by statute a stay for a longer period cannot be ordered.⁷⁴

It is held in New Jersey that, although the writ is dismissed, the inferior court is without authority to proceed, until the cause is remitted or the supersedeas discharged.⁷⁵ On the other hand, in Georgia it is held that the inferior court may proceed after the dismissal or overruling of the certiorari, before any order or mandate from the superior court is filed with the inferior court.⁷⁶

- c. Parties affected
- d. Correction of record

a. In General

Service of the writ operates as a supersedeas merely to suspend proceedings and does not prevent any proceedings not inconsistent with the dormant character of the determination so far as its enforcement is concerned.

The service of the writ acts as a supersedeas merely to suspend proceedings. The proceedings below are not reversed by the stay, but are merely suspended until the further action of the reviewing court;⁷⁷ and notwithstanding the supersedeas or stay, the judgment or order may be given in evidence or any other proceedings may be taken not inconsistent with the dormant character of the determination so far as its enforcement is concerned.⁷⁸ Furthermore, it has been held that the writ will not prevent the filing of a supplemental opinion;⁷⁹ the issuance of a dispossession warrant;⁸⁰ the giving of notice of the entry of judgment or of an order, so as to set to time running within which to settle a bill of exceptions;⁸¹ the holding of a new election under a law other than that under which the determination to be reviewed was had;⁸² or an action in an independent although incidental proceedings;⁸³ nor will the writ affect matters outstanding and not removed by it.⁸⁴

The writ, as a supersedeas, never has a retrospective action.⁸⁵

b. Collateral Proceedings

Collateral proceedings are not stayed.

The writ of certiorari operates as a supersedeas on the further prosecution of the proceedings removed for review only, and does not stay collateral proceedings.⁸⁶ Thus, the pendency of certiorari proceedings to review a decree in a suit does not operate as a stay in another suit involving the same subject matter between one of the parties to the first suit and a third person.⁸⁷

c. Parties Affected

The writ as a supersedeas affects only the inferior tribunal and the parties to the proceeding.

The suspensory power of the writ operates on the court and parties directly connected with the proceedings,⁸⁸ and also on those concerned in the matter who have notice of the writ.⁸⁹ On the other hand, the writ does not operate as a stay on any other than the inferior tribunal and the parties.⁹⁰

d. Correction of Record

After service of the writ the inferior tribunal may not alter its record or decree.

After the certiorari has been served on the inferior tribunal, the latter is powerless to alter its record or decree even for the purpose of correcting mistakes, unless the record itself furnishes the means of making the correction, or the error is a mistake in the arithmetic of the court. Such correction should be made, if at all, for the purpose of enabling the court to obey the command to send up the record, which means the correct and true record.⁹¹

§ 111. Stay Independent of Writ

- a. In general
- b. Proceedings after judgment

a. In General

In a proper case a stay may be granted or obtained independently of the writ, as on application for the writ or where the writ does not operate as a stay.

As shown in § 108, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, the writ of certiorari is of itself, proprio vigore, a supersedeas, but independently of the writ of certiorari further proceedings in the trial court may be stayed either by the trial court or the higher court, pending determination of an application for certiorari, or where in the particular case the writ of certiorari does not effectuate a stay. In a proper case a trial court may postpone further proceedings pending decision on a writ of certiorari which was not effective as a stay of proceedings in the trial court.⁹² In like manner, where authorized by statute, the court before which the application for the writ is pending may suspend or modify the decision of the lower court pending the application for the writ of certiorari.⁹³ Under a proper rule of court the filing with a court of notice of intention to apply to the higher court for writs of certiorari and review may be sufficient to suspend further proceedings in the lower court, at least for the time allowed for the filing of the application for the writ.⁹⁴ In New Jersey, it has been the practice for the "superior" court to issue a writ of supersedeas along with and to accompany the writ of certiorari, but it has been there regarded as essential that the supersedeas be supported by the writ of certiorari.⁹⁵ This writ of supersedeas, however, when issued, is merely a cautionary measure, intended as a notice that unless further proceedings are stopped liability will be incurred.⁹⁶

Proceedings after judgment may be stayed by writ of supersedeas or independent order. Execution may be stayed by the trial court pending determination of an application for certiorari; but after execution has issued certiorari will not effect a stay, but a formal supersedeas or order is required.

Proceedings subsequent to the judgment may be stayed by a writ of supersedeas or by an independent order,⁹⁷ as may the enforcement of a municipal resolution, until its validity is determined.⁹⁸ However, where the writ of certiorari is effective as a stay, the refusal to grant a stay will not change the effect of the writ.⁹⁹

In a proper case, a bond may be required as a prerequisite to granting a stay order after judgment.¹

Execution may be stayed by the trial court to await the determination of an application for a certiorari. When such a stay is granted the court must be satisfied of the good faith of applicant and must provide for sufficient security and a prompt presentation of the petition of the writ.²

United States supreme court

(1) Petition to suspend or modify decree of the circuit court of appeals pending application to the supreme court for a writ of certiorari should in the first instance be made to the circuit court of appeals. While the circuit court of appeals may, in its discretion, facilitate an application to the supreme court for a writ of certiorari by withholding its mandate or suspending its decree, this is a matter wholly within its discretion, and refusal to do so involves no disrespect for the supreme court.—Magnum Import Co. v. Coty, supra.

(2) When the circuit court of appeals refuses to withhold its mandate or suspend its decree pending application to the supreme court for writ of certiorari, it requires an extraordinary showing before the supreme court will grant a stay, and, even after it has granted the writ of certiorari, a clear case and a decided balance of convenience must exist.—Magnum Import Co. v. Coty, supra.

(3) Under Judicial Code § 262, Comp.St. § 1239, authorizing issuance of writs necessary for exercise of jurisdiction, the supreme court has jurisdiction to suspend or modify order or decree of the circuit court of appeals pending application for writ of certiorari in trade-mark case, which it has jurisdiction to review under § 240, Comp.St. § 1217, and § 128, as amended by Act Jan. 28, 1915 § 2, Comp.St. § 1120.—*Magnum Import Co. v. As stated in this case, which denied the practice in that state, it seems that by the common-law practice, where a warrant or other process issued before the receipt of the writ of certiorari, it should be superseded at once by the tribunal to which the writ is addressed.—*McWilliams v. 11 C.J. p 171 note 50.

In a jurisdiction wherein the writ of certiorari does not operate as a stay, but to accomplish this it is necessary to obtain a writ of supersedeas in aid of the certiorari, execution may issue on a judgment within the time allowed therefor, notwithstanding a petition for certiorari, unless within that time application is made for a writ of supersedeas in aid of the certiorari. The application for supersedeas should be made before execution issues, as supersedeas will not discharge the lien of an execution on land.³

When the certiorari is allowed after an execution has been issued on the judgment of the inferior court, such execution is not superseded, and the sheriff may proceed with the levy. It has been held that a formal supersedeas or order is necessary, in such a case, to stay proceedings.⁴

§ 112. Vacation of Supersedeas

Whether, having allowed the writ, the court can order that it shall not operate as a stay is doubtful.

It is doubtful whether the court, having allowed the writ, has power to make an order that the writ shall not operate as a stay. It would seem that the inferior court would be powerless to proceed, notwithstanding the vacation of the stay,⁵ and that the only course is to vacate the writ of certiorari, which, as shown in § 135, may always be done when it has been allowed improvidently.

§ 113. Liability for Disobedience of Supersedeas

To proceed in spite of the supersedeas is a contempt of court, and a trespass for which damages may be had.

Further proceedings by the officers to whom the writ is directed constitute a contempt of court, and a trespass for which they are liable in damages,⁶ and persons who violate the supersedeas, even though not parties to the writ, are punishable where they have acted as agents of the ones named therein.⁷

G. RETURN OR ANSWER

§ 114. Nature and Distinctions

The return, sometimes called an answer, is a formal transcript of the record, or so much of it as the writ requires, and a statement, where proper or necessary, of relative matters not appearing in the record. It is the only proper pleading of respondent to the writ, and even though called an answer is not to be confused with an answer as in pleading, or an answer to an application for the writ.

The court, board, or tribunal to which the writ of certiorari is directed, in obedience to the command of the writ, makes a formal transcript of its record, or such portion thereof as is designated in the writ; and in addition to such transcript, when required so to do, or when it is otherwise permissible and expedient, it makes a statement of such matters relative to its proceedings as are not contained in its record, and transmits the same to the court issuing the writ. Such transcript and statement are called the return, and such return is the only pleading on the part of defendant.⁸ Occasionally, the return is called the answer, as is the case in Georgia under the statute there in force, but in the sense in which the term is used in pleading, no answer is made in proceedings by certiorari, but the hearing is had on the writ and the return as previously defined, the return constituting both answer and evidence.⁹ However, as already pointed out supra § 86, in some states, on application for the writ, what is called an answer is interposed, but this is to be distinguished from a return or answer "after" the issuance of the writ, although governed, more or less, by the same rules.

§ 115. Necessity of

Generally, a formal return is necessary before the reviewing court will consider the proceedings or determination below; but in a proper case the court may dispense with the necessity of a formal return, and it has been affirmed and denied that the parties may waive the requirement.

Return as answer

Return to writ of review constitutes answer and evidence, case being heard thereon, unless, on motion, additional or amended return is made.—Jones v. Police Court of City of Alhambra, 260 P. 919, 86 Cal. App. 332.—Donovan v. Board of Police Com'rs of City and County of San Francisco, 163 P. 69, 32 Cal.App. 392.—11 C.J. p 172 note 59 [a].

A formal legal return is generally a prerequisite to the jurisdiction of the court to review the proceedings or determination below,¹⁰ and until it is made the court will not render any judgment or make any order except for the purpose of enforcing obedience to the writ and compelling the making of a return;¹¹ but it has been held that, to avoid a failure of justice, the cause may be heard without a formal return, as where the justice to whom the writ was directed has died before making a return.¹² So, where the court below was improperly organized because one of the judges had no power to sit, it is proper to grant the writ and at once remand the case so that it may be heard and disposed of in the lower court conformably to the statute, instead of holding the case on the docket for ultimate decision on the merits, and in such a case the record of the writ will be allowed to stand as a return.¹³

Where no return is made the record cannot be supplied by a stipulation by the attorneys of the parties which purports to set forth the facts,¹⁴ nor by a paper signed by them and purporting to give a history of the action.¹⁵ Where no return is made, the court is without jurisdiction, notwithstanding defendant files an answer, when there is no certified copy of the proceedings sought to be reviewed, or an agreed statement of facts relating thereto, before the court.¹⁶ On application for certiorari and prohibition, where no return is made, the averments of the application must be accepted as true.¹⁷

Waiver. There are holdings to the effect that a return may be waived by the parties to the writ,¹⁸ but a mere nominal party to the proceedings who is simply the custodian of the record cannot waive the necessity of a return.¹⁹

§ 116. Who May and Should Compel

The prosecutor of the writ has the duty to see that a return is made.

Although it is the duty of the officers to whom the writ is directed to prepare their return, and although they may be compelled summarily to make a return, it is incumbent on the prosecutor of the writ rather than the party adverse to him to see that the return is made, and to invoke the aid of the court to compel compliance with the mandate of the writ;²⁰ and it even has been said that defendant should not be permitted to compel the making of a return.²¹

§ 117. Who May Make or Prepare

- a. Who may make
- b. Who may prepare

a. Who May Make

The return should be made only by the court or officer who is custodian of the record and to whom the writ is properly directed. Unofficial or unauthorized returns cannot be received.

The return should be made by the officer to whom the writ is directed.²² It should not, however, be made by a person to whom the writ is improperly directed, and if made by such person will be disregarded.²³ The reviewing court cannot receive an unofficial or unauthorized return,²⁴ a return made by a person incompetent to accept service,²⁵ or a voluntary return of a state of facts made without legal authority.²⁶

Where no return is made, and there is no evidence that the writ was ever served, and the record of the court below is incomplete in material matters, submission of the case in certiorari is premature.—Mason v. District Court of Black Hawk County, Iowa, 227 N.W. 517.

A return by a party to the cause, the record of which is sought to be reviewed, has no place in the proceedings and serves no purpose, and is properly stricken on motion.²⁷

Where jurisdiction of the proceedings and the custody of the records thereof are transferred to another court, the court before which the proceedings were instituted cannot return the record, although the writ was improperly directed to it.²⁸

Inferior courts. On certiorari to bring up the record of an inferior court, the return should be made by the court²⁹ or the judge to whom the writ is directed.³⁰ In California, however, it is held that the return should be made by the clerk.³¹

If a return is made by a clerk, he, in preparing the return, acts under the direction of the court.³² So, if the object is to correct the record brought up by a writ of error, the writ may be responded to by the clerk, although directed to the court.³³

The return should be made by at least a quorum of the court as constituted at the time the writ was applied for,³⁴ and when the object is to supply facts not shown by the record, the return should be made by all the magistrates who took part in the trial.³⁵

Public boards and officers. The board or body whose determination is sought to be reviewed and which retains or controls the record must make the return.³⁶ When the writ is directed to a board, the return should not be made by individual members thereof,³⁷ although it would seem that it is sufficient if a majority of the members of the board concur in making the return.³⁸

Custodian of the record. The return should be made by the officers or persons who are the legal custodians of the record sought to be reviewed, and cannot be made by anyone else.³⁹ It follows that it is a sufficient return that respondent has in good faith parted with control of the record sought to be produced.⁴⁰

Ex-officials. An officer before whom the cause was tried, or before whom the proceedings were conducted, cannot make return after he has retired from office, where the office is a continuing one and such retired officer is no longer the custodian of the record,⁴¹ unless a personal return is desired.⁴² He may, however, return that which was done by him while in office,⁴³ and officers of a continuous body who succeed those whose action is sought to be reviewed may make a return, provided they control the record,⁴⁴ while the return may be made by their predecessors in office if the record is still in their custody.⁴⁵

b. Who May Prepare

A return may be prepared by anyone if properly sanctioned by the tribunal to which the writ is directed.

If a return is sanctioned by the court or tribunal to which the writ is directed, it is immaterial by whose hand it was actually made.⁴⁶

Whether attorney may make return. An answer in the nature of a demurrer to the petition, when allowable, supra § 86, may be made by attorney;⁴⁷ but a return, or an answer which contains allegations and denials of matters of fact and which partakes of the nature of a return, cannot be made and signed by counsel.⁴⁸ In New York, however, it has been held that a return is not objectionable, although drawn by the attorney for the respondent, but the rule is stricter where it is drawn by the attorney for the party suing out the writ.⁴⁹

§ 118. Time for Return

The time for return is frequently regulated by statute. Return should be made not later than the day on which the writ is returnable, but in a proper case an extension of time may be allowed.

The return should be made not later than the day on which the writ is returnable, although it may be made at any time during such day, in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary.⁵⁰ The time and place of the return may be fixed by the court in its discretion.⁵¹ When so required by statute, the return must be filed on the first day of the term to which the writ is returnable,⁵² unless further time is given.⁵³ In a proper case, it has been held that an extension of time may be granted,⁵⁴ in which case, of course, the return must be made not later than the day to which the time has been extended.⁵⁵ After adjournment of the term to which the writ was returnable, a grant of further time in which to file an answer or return is improper.⁵⁶

While a return may be made before the return day, no jurisdiction is conferred thereby until the return day.⁵⁷

The writ of certiorari cannot properly be answered until after sanction of the petition or issuance of the writ.⁵⁸

§ 119. Annexation to Writ, and Filing

The return should be properly attached to the writ, and filed.

It is not proper to transmit the return to the reviewing court as a loose and fragmentary paper, but it should be properly attached, by wafers or otherwise, to the writ,⁵⁹ and filed.⁶⁰

§ 120. Formal Matters

A return should be signed and sealed, but verification is unnecessary.

The return should purport to be a return,⁶¹ and should be signed⁶² by all members when addressed to a board,⁶³ and sealed;⁶⁴ but it need not be verified.⁶⁵ A return signed by the members of a board is presumed to be under their official oaths, without further affidavit.⁶⁶

Where a return includes a transcript of the testimony given at the hearing in the proceeding sought to be reviewed, the transcript need not be signed by the witnesses who gave the testimony.⁶⁷

Effect of local practice

Where the answer to the writ of certiorari was not filed at the term to which it was returnable, and no order was made directing magistrate to answer, the petition for certiorari, on motion of defendant on certiorari, should be dismissed on that ground, although answer was filed before the case was reached in order for a hearing, and a local practice permitted such delay in the filing of such answers.—Henry v. Premature answer

A certificate by the magistrate, admitting the truth of the allegations in the petition for certiorari, entered on or attached to the petition before it has been sanctioned or the writ of certiorari has been issued, cannot be considered as an answer to the writ, and the magistrate is without authority to answer certiorari until the issuance of the writ.—Kirkland v. (1) In General

Unauthorized or irrelevant matter should not be included in the return.

Great liberality is allowed officers and boards in making returns, as to the facts on which they based their action,⁸⁰ but the return should not include matters not commanded to be returned,⁸¹ or not required by the practice,⁸² matters not appearing on the face of the record,⁸³ or matter which is neither a part of the record nor of the proceedings to be reviewed.⁸⁴ So, it has been held that a certificate as to what has occurred before the judge of the lower court prior to and after trial, made merely at the request of the prosecutor's attorney, and not called for by any rule of the court issuing the writ, will not be considered.⁸⁵

Reference in the return to a controversy growing out of a case not before the court and in no way connected with the issues presented is not irrelevant or immaterial when it appears in connection with respondent's assertion of a fact and denial of an allegation of relator in his application for certiorari.⁸⁶

(2) Striking Out

Immaterial matters or matters dehors the record may be stricken from the return, but the better practice is merely to disregard such matters on the review of the return. Such matters, if informative, may be permitted to remain.

It has been held that immaterial matter or matter dehors the record may be stricken out on application⁸⁷ or on the hearing⁸⁸ as surplusage; it is generally regarded as better practice that matters in the return which are merely irrelevant should not be stricken out, but should be disregarded on the review of the return,⁸⁹ for the reason that there is danger of striking out portions of the return that are properly contained in it, and no possible harm can result from surplusage which is disregarded.⁹⁰ So, if it tends to inform the court of the proceedings, irresponsive or irrelevant matter which is returned may be permitted to remain.⁹¹ At any event, the court cannot strike out parts of a return, where to do so would leave part of what remains imperfect and meaningless, since the court thereby indirectly itself makes a return.⁹² Matters which are proper subjects of return will not, of course, be stricken,⁹³ nor will the transcript of testimony be stricken because not showing the witnesses were sworn, when the findings of the tribunal whose acts are under review show they were sworn.⁹⁴

c. Certification of New Matter

Matter not of record may in a proper case be required to be certified in the return.

If the reviewing court desires to be informed of the facts on which the inferior jurisdiction acted, and which are not technically of record, it may require the certification of such facts in the return.⁹⁵ If the petitioner desires to raise points not appearing on the record, it is necessary to make a motion that the respondent be ordered to certify the material facts in addition to the record disclosed by the answer or return.⁹⁶

§ 122. Statement of Contents and of Obedience to Writ

Obedience to a writ must be shown by the return, and when necessary it should state that all required matters are returned.

The return must show that it is made in obedience to a writ duly issued,⁹⁷ which should accompany it;⁹⁸ and where so required by the local practice, should contain a statement to the effect that all the acts and proceedings below, or those referred to in the writ, are returned.⁹⁹

§ 123. Record

The return should consist of a full and complete transcript of the record, or proceedings and orders in the nature of a record, of the inferior tribunal.

Where the rules of the common law are adhered to, the writ brings up, and the return can only properly include, the record, or proceedings and orders in the nature of a record, on which the determination which is the subject of review was made,¹ and the return should consist of a full and complete transcript of the record of the proceedings of which a review is sought, since the trial is had by an inspection of the record as returned, and not on any issue of fact.²

§ 124. — What Constitutes

The record, in the case of a court, generally consists of the process, pleadings, verdict, and judgment; and the record as it existed at the time of issuance or service of the writ is the record to be certified.

On certiorari to review the action of a court, the record to be returned generally consists of the process, pleadings, verdict, and judgment.³ The facts found by the inferior tribunal are part of the record.⁴

Where there is technically no record, the written proceedings and orders, or a history of the proceedings and the written orders which are in the nature of records, are to be certified.⁵

As of what time. The record as it existed at the time when the writ was issued⁶ or when the writ was served⁷ is the record which must be certified and returned by the person or officer having custody or control of such record. A transcript of the evidence is not subsequent proceedings or matters dehors the record, even though made and certified after service of the writ, where such transcript was prepared by the stenographic reporter from his shorthand notes taken at the time of the hearing.⁸ A garnishee's answer, filed after certiorari was issued is properly certified to the reviewing court.⁹ In a proper case, an amended abstract of the record may be filed after the return, and when so done in conformity to a court order, will not be stricken.¹⁰

§ 125. — Jurisdictional Facts

The return must show the jurisdiction of the lower tribunal.

A return from an inferior judicatory or depository of specially delegated and limited powers must affirmatively show jurisdiction. Nothing is intended to be within the jurisdiction except that which is expressly averred so to be;¹¹ and the return must present such facts, or proof of such facts, as will enable the reviewing court to determine the jurisdiction,¹² as where the jurisdiction of an inferior tribunal depends on a fact to be proved before itself,¹³ although it has been held that omitted matters necessary to show jurisdiction may be supplied by extrinsic evidence.¹⁴ It is not necessary that the jurisdiction of the inferior tribunal appear on the face of any special paper so long as it appears somewhere in the record.¹⁵

§ 126. — Evidence

Ordinarily, the evidence forms no part of the record, but must be returned when the law or the writ so requires. Evidence of facts on which the jurisdiction of the inferior tribunal depends should be returned, and so in a review of a summary conviction under a penal statute, or where the scope of review has been extended.

Unless by statute or under the circumstances hereinafter referred to, the evidence on which the inferior jurisdiction based its determination forms no part of the record and should not be returned;¹⁶ but where the law requires the inferior tribunal to reduce the evidence taken before it to writing,¹⁷ or the writ so commands,¹⁸ the evidence may properly be returned.

On questions of jurisdiction. The main office of the writ being to confine the actions of inferior tribunals and boards within the limits of their delegated powers, the reviewing court must reexamine their decisions on all questions on which their jurisdiction depends, whether of law or of fact,¹⁹ and the evidence touching the facts on which the jurisdiction of the inferior court or tribunal depends must be returned, to enable the reviewing court to examine the same and to determine whether jurisdiction was lawfully assumed.²⁰

11 C.J. p 177 note 31.

To review summary conviction under penal statute. A common-law writ of certiorari to review a summary conviction under a penal statute brings up, not only questions affecting the jurisdiction of the magistrate, but also the question whether there was any evidence to warrant the conviction. In such cases the evidence must appear on the face of the record.²¹ The evidence given in a qui tam action should not be returned, however, as such action is not a summary prosecution.²²

Where scope of review extended. If in addition to the right to ascertain whether the inferior tribunal proceeded regularly and within its jurisdiction, the court is also authorized to review errors, in addition to the record in its strict sense, there may be returned such rulings and decisions of legal questions, together with the facts and evidence relative thereto, as may be necessary to enable the reviewing court to see that there was proof, and that the proof was sufficient to support the determination and to justify the action below.²³ Where a review of the evidence on which the inferior court or tribunal acted is authorized, the evidence should be returned,²⁴ since the power to review on the merits confers, as a necessary incident to the proper exercise of such power, the right to require the inferior tribunal to return on the certiorari such parts of the proceedings as are material to the examination of the case on its merits.²⁵ When it is expressly required by statute that the evidence shall be returned, such statute is not complied with unless all the evidence is returned;²⁶ and there should be a certificate or satisfactory showing that all the evidence is returned;²⁷ but where the return sets forth the evidence in detail, it is sufficient, although there is no express statement that there was no other evidence.²⁸

Method of returning evidence. The evidence should be returned as reduced to writing at the time when it was taken, and it is not proper to make a statement, based on affidavits of bystanders, as to what was testified to,²⁹ and sending up a stenographic transcript of the testimony in compliance with a statutory provision is a sufficient return of the evidence.³⁰

Evidence improperly returned. Where the evidence is improperly directed to be returned, the inferior tribunal or board should disregard such command and refuse to return the evidence.³¹ If it is improperly returned the proper course is to disregard it.³²

§ 127. — Statements Contained in Application

Ordinarily, statements contained in the application for the writ are improper as part of the return.

Matters stated in the petition or affidavit on which the writ was granted are not proper as a part of the return.³³ The return should contain a complete history of the proceedings in itself, and should not merely adopt as true statements in the petition

On review of proceedings of county board of supervisors in creating storm water district, although evidence before board was not recorded, it should make as full a return thereof as possible, where question raises its jurisdiction.—*Bryant v. Trial judge's answer to petition for certiorari filed in superior court should contain evidence in case or adopt in whole or in part statement of evidence contained in petition, and original papers in case may not be sent up, but trial judge should either approve copies of pleadings and record contained in petition for certiorari or attach to his answer copies thereof and certify them as true and correct.—Norris v. Sibert & Robinson, supra.

Grounds for determination

(1) Legal evidence, findings, and determination are necessary on certiorari when petition is denied, so that reviewing tribunal will know what facts were found and on what evidence and on what determination rests.—Daley v. Byrne, 295 N.Y.S. 452, 250 App.Div. 666.

(2) Where project of constructing school building was abandoned, grounds for determination by board of education of amount due for architect's services must appear in record, and mere claim of exercise of discretion and judgment is insufficient.—*People ex rel. or affidavit for the writ,³⁴ although an answer under the Georgia practice, adopting the petition, with the exception of the assignments of error, is regarded as sufficient,³⁵ and exhibits incorporated in the petition for the writ do not constitute a transcript of the record and proceedings so as to amount to a proper return.³⁶

§ 128. — Bills of Exceptions

Bills of exceptions, if part of the record, should be included in the return.

Bills of exceptions which have been signed, sealed, and made a part of the record should be included in the return;³⁷ but a bill of exceptions, as a part of the return, is improper where not a part of the record.³⁸

§ 129. — Original or Copies

A transcript, rather than the original record, may be returned, unless return of the original is required.

Although the command of the writ is that the record of the inferior court or tribunal shall be sent up, it is not necessary to send up the record itself, but a transcript should be returned,³⁹ unless there is an unmistakable command, made to suit the exigencies of the particular case, that the record itself shall be sent up and not a transcript, in which case the writ must be obeyed literally.⁴⁰ However, unless for some special cause shown, the court will not require the return of the original record.⁴¹

Where the certiorari is in the nature of a writ of error, the record itself is to be sent up, to the end that the judgment of the court may conclude it;⁴² but where the object is not to affect the record itself, or where the court awarding the writ cannot hold plea of the record, only the tenor thereof need be certified.⁴³

§ 130. Defects, Objections, and Waiver

Defects and errors in the return may be corrected on motion, or in any manner provided by statute, and may be waived.

Errors in the return may be corrected on motion⁴⁴ of either party or by the court on its own motion,⁴⁵ and a demurrer is improper,⁴⁶ as is a replication challenging parts of the return.⁴⁷ An immaterial variance may be disregarded.⁴⁸

The insufficiency of a return in form or substance may be waived by failure to make timely objection⁴⁹ or to take steps to correct it.⁵⁰

A motion for judgment on the pleadings and return admits the correctness of the substantive facts pleaded in the return,⁵¹ and the orders shown therein.⁵²

In Georgia a statute provides for the filing of exceptions to the return (called an answer) and defects in the answer must be objected to in this manner.⁵³ The statutes also provide for a traverse of the truth of the answer or return, which is to be made in the manner and form provided by the stat-

Hearing on merits as waiver

The fact that a return to a petition for writ of certiorari to quash proceedings of a board of aldermen was not properly signed by all the members, and that there were other informalities, were defects of form, which were waived by going to a hearing on the merits.—Byfield v. City of Newton, 141 N.E. 658, 247 Mass. 46.

Incomplete answer

Answer to certiorari having failed to verify only errors which authorized sustaining writ, there was no error in refusing oral motion to strike answer and require respondent to reanswer, nor in dismissing petition.—Macris v. Tsipourous, 134 S. E. 621, 35 Ga.App. 671.

ute, at the first term and before the hearing.⁵⁴ The office and purpose of the exceptions to the answer and of a traverse thereto are to perfect the answer so as to present to the reviewing court what actually occurred on the trial.⁵⁵ Such exceptions must specify the defects in the return,⁵⁶ must not be argumentative, or critical of respondent's motives and conduct in failing to answer differently,⁵⁷ and notice of their filing must be given the opposing party before the case is called.⁵⁸ Where the answer apparently included everything relating to the case within the knowledge of the trial judge, it is not improper to refuse to permit exceptions.⁵⁹

If both exceptions and a traverse are filed in the same case, the court should act on the exceptions before disposing of the traverse.⁶⁰ A so-called traverse which on its face is really exceptions is properly stricken.⁶¹ Where a traverse raises an issue as to what was the material evidence on the trial, that issue should be determined before sustaining or overruling the certiorari, as may be done where questions of fact are involved and the evidence is conflicting.⁶²

§ 131. Amended or Further Return

- a. In general
- b. Grounds
- c. Motion
- d. Effect

a. In General

Generally a defective return, so long as the defects are not fatal, may be amended or a further return allowed or required.

When the return is informal, improperly made, or insufficient, the practice is not to dismiss the writ,⁶³ but to allow or to require an amended or further return to be made.⁶⁴

54. Ga.—Nixon v. Growers' Finance Corporation, 157 S.E. 119, 42 Ga. App. 642.

11 C.J. p 180 note 75.

Either party may traverse trial judge's answer to petition for certiorari filed in superior court.—Norris v. Sibert & Robinson, 186 S.E. 199, 53 Ga.App. 440.

Correction of clerical error

In view of Civ.Code 1910 § 5709, where, by inadvertent clerical error, date of filing in superior court of answer of trial judge to writ of certiorari was incorrectly written by him and signed by clerk of superior court, entry of filing could be corrected so as to speak truth, and testimony of trial judge and clerk of superior court, appearing voluntarily, was admissible to show uncontroverted facts, without filing of traverse to clerk's entry of filing. —Brown v. Johnson-Brown Co., 126 S.E. 550, 33 Ga.App. 419.

Matter not traversable

(1) Statement of trial judge that he could not verify truth of paragraphs in writ, because he did not recollect them.—Macris v. Tspourses, 134 S.E. 621, 35 Ga.App. 671.

(2) If the judge states in his answer that he cannot remember the testimony adduced at the trial, an exception or traverse to the answer is of no avail.—Hicks v. Lindsey, 97 S.E. 101, 22 Ga.App. 674—Gilmore v. Georgian Co., 88 S.E. 416, 17 Ga.App. 735.

55. Ga.—Smith v. M. & J. Rosenberg Corporation, 162 S.E. 411, 44 Ga.App. 586—Dailey v. York, 145 S.E. 470, 38 Ga.App. 762—Etheridge v. Taylor, 137 S.E. 641, 36 Ga.App. 609.

11 C.J. p 180 note 73.

Insufficient grounds for reversal

Exceptions to answer of municipal court judge to defendant's petition for certiorari as insufficiently verifying certain allegations of fact in petition present no ground for reversal of superior court's judgment overruling certiorari, where judge treated allegations as properly verified facts.—Spielberger v. W. H. Hall & Co., 126 S.E. 552, 33 Ga.App. 406, transferred. 126 S.E. 391, 159 Ga. 511.

58. Ga.—Norris v. Sibert & Robinson, 186 S.E. 199, 53 Ga.App. 440. 11 C.J. p 180 note 74.

Effect of failure to give notice

Where incomplete and insufficient answer was made by trial judge to petition for certiorari filed in superior court and exceptions thereto were filed by plaintiff in certiorari, but no notice of exceptions was given to opposite party before case was called in its order for hearing, petition for certiorari is dismissible.—Norris v. Sibert & Robinson, supra.

11 C.J. p 180 note 81.

Incomplete answer

Plaintiff in certiorari may have answer to certiorari petition perfected, if answer is not complete.—Nixon v. Growers' Finance Corporation, 157 S.E. 119, 42 Ga.App. 642.

Approval of amended return

Motion for order approving filing of amended return setting out transcript and exhibits, although not required, is not improper, in view of peculiar record.—Roberts v. Fuller, 229 N.W. 163, 210 Iowa 956.

Correction by lower court only

Correction of the record certified up by the court, board, or tribunal to whom the writ is directed must be made by requiring the court or officer to correct it. If any part of the record which is being challenged has been lost or destroyed, it may be supplied or restored in the court where it originated, in accordance with the rules of procedure in such case, and not in the court to which it is certified.—Higgs v. Burton, 197 P. 728, 58 Utah 99.

Generally a return which is not fatally defective may be amended,⁶⁵ and time may be allowed for that purpose,⁶⁶ or the court of review may suspend its action to permit a proper amendment to be made.⁶⁷ Where an answer of the trial judge states that he cannot remember the facts of the case, he cannot be required to answer more fully.⁶⁸

The fact that the term of office of the officer making the return has expired does not preclude an order for a further return,⁶⁹ nor prevent the ex-official from making the necessary corrections;⁷⁰ and a supplemental return may properly be made by the new officers of a continuing body.⁷¹

If, after a further return has been ordered, the terms of the writ are materially modified, the return made and all subsequent proceedings will be canceled and the order for a further return falls.⁷²

Discretion of court. A motion for a further and more specific return is addressed to the discretion of the court.⁷³ The time at which an amended return may be filed is largely a matter of discretion for the court.⁷⁴

Number of returns. Further returns may be directed until neither party can object.⁷⁵

Amendment by lower tribunal. The lower tribunal may amend its record before the return day of the writ and the actual removal of the record, to make it complete,⁷⁶ provided, as shown supra § 110, the amendment does not materially change the record.

Amendment by striking out. It seems that the party making the return may amend it, by leave of court, by striking out certain allegations therein.⁷⁷

b. Grounds

An amended or further return may be allowed or required to supply matters omitted from the original return. Amendments will not be allowed to contradict the original return or to bring up unnecessary matters; but a further return may be ordered to eliminate immaterial matter.

The omission of any necessary particulars from the return will authorize the court to allow an amendment thereto or to compel a further return.⁷⁸ Thus, where the seal is omitted from the return,⁷⁹ where the title of the cause is erroneous,⁸⁰ where the verification, if required, is omitted,⁸¹ where the return is evasive,⁸² where it does not contain words showing that it was made in obedience to the writ,⁸³ or where it does not purport to contain all of the acts and proceedings of the inferior board or tribunal, as required by the command of the writ,⁸⁴ it is proper either to allow an amendment or to direct a further return. An amended return may be filed when a transcript of the evidence could not be obtained within the time when the return was required to be made.⁸⁵ Where the petitioner wishes to raise facts not of record, and which are suggested by the petition, he should move that defendant be ordered to certify such material facts in addition to the record.⁸⁶

Amendment to contradict return. An amendment will not be allowed where it is in effect an attempt on affidavits to traverse the return and to seek, through the medium of an order, an adjudication that the return is not true in fact, and a requirement that the lower tribunal state the contrary of what they have already certified.⁸⁷

Unnecessary matters. An amended or further return will not be allowed or ordered for the purpose of bringing up matters as to which a return is unnecessary,⁸⁸ when the court is satisfied that its judgment would be the same with or without a further return, and that a further return would be idle,⁸⁹ or when the return already made is sufficiently full and complete and does not appear to be defective.⁹⁰ So a further return cannot be required as to a matter concerning which the writ did not require any return.⁹¹ Likewise, a further return should not be allowed or ordered as to matters not of record and involving the operation of the minds of the returning officers.⁹²

A further return may be ordered to eliminate immaterial matters.⁹³

c. Motion

The sanction of the court must be obtained for an amendment or a further return on timely and proper motion.

An amendment of the return after it has been made and filed is allowable only under the sanction of the court issuing the writ.⁹⁴ So, if an additional return is sought, the party desiring such additional return must obtain an order specifying the particulars in respect of which a further return is required.⁹⁵

Who may move. The amendment or further return may be obtained on the motion of either party;⁹⁶ but the party who sues out the writ is entitled to rely on the return made if he chooses so to do, and, if jurisdictional facts are omitted from the return, it is incumbent on defendant to procure a further return.⁹⁷ In a proper case the court may order a further return of its own motion against objection.⁹⁸ However, the reviewing court cannot itself amend the return by adding a recital that certain evidence was considered.⁹⁹

Time for application. Amendments must be sought promptly,¹ although in Massachusetts they have been allowed at the hearing.² In Georgia, however, it has been held error to allow an amendment during the hearing.³

The motion for a further return must specify the particulars in which the return already made is deficient,⁴ and it would seem that such motion should be supported by affidavit showing the amendment desired,⁵ or the incompleteness of the return.⁶

d. Effect

Where a further return is made, it alone is to be considered. When no further return is made, obscurities in the return will receive no consideration.

Further return properly refused

On certiorari to review proceedings of county superintendent in the matter of consolidating certain school districts, where return showed a substantial compliance with statutory requirements precedent to entry of final order of consolidation, court did not err in refusing to require superintendent to make further return to alleged facts not of record, which might have the effect of showing that her original return was false, in that notices of election were not signed by her as superintendent.—Austin v. When a second return is made, the first return becomes an absolute nullity and cannot be looked to in order to supply deficiencies in the second return.⁷ Where a trial judge, in response to rules to certify, has made contradictory certificates, the final certificate must be taken as truly stating what occurred with regard to the trial.⁸

Effect of failure to procure. If a return is obscure as to a particular fact, and no further return is sought, no consideration will be given to the return on that point.⁹

§ 132. Refusal to Make Return, and Remedies Therefor

The officer or person required to make a return or further return may be compelled to do so, and be punished for refusal. Nonpayment of fees provided for making of return is ground for refusal to make a return.

A judicial officer or other person who refuses to obey the mandate of the writ, or an order requiring a further return, may be compelled so to do,¹⁰ and may also be punished for the disobedience,¹¹ as for a contempt.¹² The application to compel a return must show the delivery of the writ and a refusal to obey it after a reasonable time,¹³ but a petition to punish as for contempt need not aver illegality in the proceedings sought to be reviewed.¹⁴

A board or officer may refuse to make a return until the fees provided by law for making the same are paid,¹⁵ and a copy of the return should not be ordered supplied to the petitioner unless the petitioner pays for it.¹⁶

§ 133. False Returns

In general the remedy for the making of a false return is by action against the officer making it.

If a false return is made, the only remedy is by action against the officer who made it,¹⁷ and not by motion to correct it,¹⁸ or for an order for a further return,¹⁹ except where this is allowed by statute;²⁰ but an action is not maintainable unless injury has been actually suffered in consequence of such falsity.²¹

The complaint in an action for making a false return should distinctly show by its averments that the return was false, and that the injury complained of was sustained by reason of such falsity.²²

H. DISMISSAL OR QUASHING OF WRIT

§ 134. Distinction between Quashal and Supersedeas

A writ of certiorari generally may be superseded before a return has been made to the writ, but may be dismissed or quashed only after such return. Overruling is practically the same as dismissing certiorari.

The terms "quashal" and "dismissal" are used interchangeably; but a distinction has been made between quashing or dismissing the writ and superseding it, in that the writ is quashed or dismissed only after the return has been made, while it is superseded before the return.²³ In other words, ac-

In certiorari proceeding to review determination of the board of estimates and apportionment of city of New York denying the petitioner's application for disability retirement as member of New York City employees' retirement system, application to direct respondent to furnish petitioner with copies of return filed by the medical board with the clerk of court would be denied unless petitioner paid for copies to be furnished, since, under the Civil Practice Act, payment for copy to be furnished to the petitioner is a condition precedent.—Sullivan v. Where respondent has not made return upon the writ of certiorari, and it has been shown from the petition that the record sought to be certified is correct, the proper order is not for quashal or dismissal, but that the writ be superseded.—King v. Board of Canvassers and Regis-cording to this distinction, after the return of the writ the proper practice is to move to quash or dismiss the writ;²⁴ but, although the writ has been served, if it has not been returned, it is not before the court and cannot be quashed, and the proper practice is to move to supersede it,²⁵ and this is the remedy for defective service of a writ.²⁶ These distinctions, however, are for the most part disregarded by the courts, and, as will be noted hereafter in § 139, there is a conflict in the decisions as to whether a motion to quash or dismiss may or must be made before or after the return.

The overruling of a certiorari is generally practically the same as the dismissal thereof.²⁷

a. In General

Material defects and irregularities with respect to the application for, and granting of, a writ of certiorari may constitute grounds for the dismissal or quashing of the writ.

Some of the asserted grounds for dismissing the writ on motion, such as defects in the writ, as stated supra § 106, and failure to serve the writ, as stated supra § 107, have already been noticed; and failure to serve notice of the time and place of hearing, as required in some states, as ground for dismissal, is hereafter considered in § 144.

The writ may be dismissed or quashed when in the progress of the cause facts appear which would have defeated the application,²⁸ or where the record presents no question of jurisdiction, palpable abuse of power by the court, or serious misconduct in the findings and consequent material injury to the petitioner.²⁹ On the other hand, the writ will not be dismissed on grounds already considered and passed on in allowing it,³⁰ or where the return discloses matter which, if presented, would have induced its issue,³¹ or because of alleged errors in the proceedings with reference to which no question was raised in the trial court.³²

Failure to comply with a statute, or rule or order of court, requiring the service and filing of printed abstracts, briefs, and arguments has been held sufficient ground for dismissal,³³ as has also a failure to comply with a statute requiring a copy of the pleadings to be filed with the application for

Transcript not containing bill of exceptions

Certiorari to review circuit court's judgment, affirming judgment of lower court, should be quashed, where transcript contained no authenticated bill of exceptions.—Emerson v. Hughson, 141 So. 877, 105 Fla. 558—Myer-Kotkin v. Walker, 134 So. 538, 101 Fla. 455.

the writ.³⁴ On the other hand, it has been held not sufficient ground for dismissal to fail to comply with a rule of court requiring the petition to be accompanied by the briefs in the lower court, for the convenience and information of the court,³⁵ or requiring a copy of defendant's exceptions, or the reasons of the lower court for refusing a rehearing, to be attached;³⁶ or to fail to serve or file an abstract, as required, where the case is continued with the consent of respondent,³⁷ or the relator is granted leave to amend.³⁸ So also, failure to furnish defendant with a printed brief in the lower court has been held insufficient ground for dismissal, where the petition sets forth all the law and the facts, and cites all decisions bearing on the matter.³⁹

Acquiescence in, or compliance with, determination below. The writ will not be dismissed on the ground of the relator's acquiescence in the determination below, where that fact is disputed;⁴⁰ nor will it be dismissed on the ground that the determination or order sought to be reversed has been complied with, where some measures of relief may be afforded by a reversal,⁴¹ or such compliance was involuntary.⁴² Where the grounds for dismissal of the writ in particular cases are specified by statute, other grounds are not available.⁴³

Confirmation of proceedings by statute. The writ will be quashed where the irregularities in the proceedings of the inferior tribunal have been cured by statute, although the writ was issued before the enactment of the statute;⁴⁴ or, where a curative statute is enacted, the court instead of quashing the writ may give the prosecutor leave to discontinue.⁴⁵

Death of interested person. The death of a person who is interested in the proceedings under review, but who is not a party, is not ground for dismissal.⁴⁶

Former adjudication. The prior determination of the same question on a former writ is a sufficient reason for dismissal.⁴⁷

Misdescription of judgment. Failure of the judgment sent up to answer the description in the writ is not ground for quashal, since an alias writ should be allowed.⁴⁸

Multifariousness. It is ground for quashal that the writ was sued out to review two distinct adjudications.⁴⁹

Public policy or public inconvenience. The writ may be dismissed in the interest of justice, where public policy so requires, or where public inconvenience will result from a reversal of the determination complained of.⁵⁰

Trivial objections. The writ will not be dismissed or quashed because of unintentional irregularities or defects which do not affect the result,⁵¹

Original certiorari void, dismissal of second

Where original certiorari was dismissed for want of statutory notice of sanction, it was void ab initio, and petitioner was not entitled to renew it; therefore dismissal of a second certiorari before return term was not error.—Brackett v. Sebastian, 89 S.E. 1102, 18 Ga.App. 525.

As to time returnable

The writ will not be dismissed for failure of the clerk to make it returnable to the ensuing term of court.—Lindheim v. Davis, 2 Tex.A. Civ.Cas. § 108.

Failure of judge to indicate official character

Where recitals in bill of exceptions show that judge acted in his official capacity, his failure to attach words indicative of official character did not render judgment dismissing certiorari void.—Russell v. Kennington, 128 S.E. 531, 160 Ga. 467.

such as that it was dated later than the day on which it issued,⁵² or was improperly indorsed or entitled in the name of the state,⁵³ or that relator's brief did not include a fair and concise statement of facts, where it shows what the issues were.⁵⁴ A mere discrepancy between the copy of the notice of the granting of the writ attached to the petition and the notice served on the attorney has been held not ground.⁵⁵ Failure to pay the docket fee is not ground for setting aside an order granting the writ.⁵⁶

b. Writ Improvidently Granted

A writ of certiorari may be superseded or dismissed or quashed on the ground that it was improvidently granted.

The writ may be superseded or quashed because improvidently granted,⁵⁷ especially where the petitioner joins in the motion to dismiss.⁵⁸ It may be dismissed or quashed where it clearly appears that discretion in granting the writ has been improperly exercised,⁵⁹ or where the papers on which the order of certiorari was granted are insufficient in law upon their face,⁶⁰ or where it appears that the prosecutor had no such interest as entitled him to sue it out,⁶¹ or that he had a remedy by appeal, and failed to resort to it as he should have done,⁶² or where substantial justice has been done, even though some irregularity of procedure has occurred, and entry of a regular and proper judgment will have the same result, as affects the rights of the certiorari petitioner.⁶³ The fact that the writ has been duly issued is immaterial, especially in those cases in which it has been issued on an ex parte application.⁶⁴

Want of jurisdiction to grant. A writ which the court had no jurisdiction to issue should be dismissed,⁶⁵ as where the writ has been improperly allowed by the judge out of court,⁶⁶ or by a judge other than the one to whom the application is addressed,⁶⁷ or where the case is one of which the court is without jurisdiction.⁶⁸ However, the granting of the writ by a judge of another circuit than that in which the case is pending is not ground for dismissal where the judge of the latter circuit certifies that he was absent at the time.⁶⁹

Appeal pending. It has been held ground for quashal that an appeal was pending at the time of the issuance of the writ.⁷⁰

c. Insufficiency of Petition or Affidavit

Insufficiency of the petition for the writ, or of the supporting affidavit, may constitute ground for the dismissal or quashing of the writ.

Insufficiency of the petition for the writ, in that its allegations do not show that the petitioner is entitled to the writ, is ground for quashing the writ.⁷¹

as where it contains no adequate or legal assignment of error;⁷² or does not state the case as presented on argument;⁷³ and this rule also applies where an amendment to the petition has been improperly allowed.⁷⁴ Where, however, sufficient grounds for the issuance of the writ are alleged, it is not ground for a quashal that other grounds are set out which are not sufficient for such purpose;⁷⁵ and separate and distinct writs will not be dismissed because they were issued on one petition, where there has been no attempt to consolidate them.⁷⁶ Furthermore, irregularities in suing out the writ or defects in the petition will not authorize a dismissal where a trial de novo is to be had,⁷⁷ or where the applicant has not been ruled to perfect it.⁷⁸

The fact that the petition is not sufficiently supported by affidavit, as required by statute, is ground for dismissal or quashing of the writ.⁷⁹ However, on motion to dismiss the writ because of the insufficiency of the affidavit, the petition may be cured by an answer which shows that the statements in the petition are true;⁸⁰ and the writ will not be dismissed because of the insufficiency of the affidavit where it substantially complies with the statute, and no specific objection is made thereto.⁸¹

d. Failure to Give Notice

Failure to give notice, as required by statute or rule of court, as to the application for the writ may constitute ground for dismissal.

Failure to give, as required by statute or rule of court, notice of intention to apply for the writ,⁸² or to serve notice of the date of the filing of the petition, together with a copy of the petition and brief, on opposing counsel,⁸³ or to make a rule on the opposite party to show cause against the issuance of the writ,⁸⁴ have been held grounds for dismissal, unless the objection has been waived by appearance or otherwise.⁸⁵

Loss or waiver of right generally see infra § 137.

e. Failure to Allow Writ

Issuance of the writ without being specially allowed may constitute ground for dismissal.

It is ground for quashing the writ that it was issued without being specially allowed,⁸⁶ except where the objection is waived by defendant voluntarily appearing without excepting to the writ because of such issuance,⁸⁷ and except where the writ is a matter of right.⁸⁸ The court, however, may refuse to quash the proceedings for the want of allowance of the writ, if on examination it is apparent that it would have been allowed, or will be allowed, on a new application.⁸⁹

f. Premature Application for, or Issuance of, Writ

The writ may be quashed because of a premature issuance thereof; but not because of a premature prior application.

The writ should be quashed where it was improperly issued while the proceedings sought to be reviewed were pending, and before the rendition of judgment.⁹⁰ The pendency of a prior application for the writ, prematurely made, is not ground for quashal.⁹¹

g. Erroneous Direction of Writ and Improper Parties

A writ directed to, or joined in by, improper parties may be dismissed or quashed as to such parties.

Where the writ is directed to improper parties defendant, it should be dismissed,⁹² except where the defect has been cured by an affidavit, accompanying the writ, which properly describes the respondent, and by a return actually being made.⁹³

Where, however, the writ is addressed to an improper party as well as to the proper party, it will not be quashed except as to the improper party.⁹⁴ So also the joinder of parties who are not entitled to the writ with parties who are entitled to it as parties plaintiff is not ground for dismissal, since the defect may be reached by motion to strike out the parties improperly joined;⁹⁵ and, if each has a right to prosecute the certiorari, the remedy is to supersede the writ before the return is filed;⁹⁶ nor will the writ be quashed because directed to an unnecessary party, if no command is made of him.⁹⁷ Moreover, the writ will not be quashed because the officers to whom it is directed are given a wrong official designation.⁹⁸

If no motion is made to supersede or quash the writ, the question of improper parties plaintiff cannot be first urged at the hearing by a motion for judgment on the pleadings,⁹⁹ and error in omitting to join a necessary party as relator is waived where no objection is made thereto until after a hearing on the merits.¹

h. Want or Insufficiency of Bond

Want or insufficiency of a certiorari bond may constitute ground for dismissing or quashing the writ.

Where no bond has been given in compliance with the order allowing the writ, or as required by statute,² where a writ of error bond has been given, in-

Petition assigning error on final judgment

Where the petition contains an assignment of error on a final judgment, such as the overruling of plaintiff's motion for a new trial, the writ is not dismissible, although a judgment directing a verdict sustaining defendant's plea of tender and limiting plaintiff's recovery to the amount tendered is not a final one.—Guaranty Life Ins. Co. of Savannah v. Bell, 156 S.E. 319, 42 Ga. App. 415.

Tex.—Cotton v. Gammon, 4 Tex. 83. Although good as a common-law

stead of a certiorari bond,³ where the bond is not filed until after the time limited for the allowance of the writ,⁴ where a bond is not given with two sureties as required by statute,⁵ where the surety's name was signed by an attorney in fact whose authority did not accompany the bond,⁶ or where an order to supply a lost bond is not complied with,⁷ the writ will be dismissed. The writ will not be dismissed, however, for a clerical error in the date of the bond;⁸ nor for defects in the condition of the bond where it is permissible to amend the bond,⁹ unless the party in whose favor the writ is issued fails or refuses, when required to do so, to make a good bond;¹⁰ nor should the writ be quashed for insufficiency of the bond in amount without giving the petitioner an opportunity to amend the bond.¹¹

Acceptance of security in open court. On motion to dismiss the writ because of the insufficiency of the bond in that it was not properly signed and sealed, the court may decline to dismiss, and accept security offered in open court.¹²

Approval of bond. The writ may be dismissed on the ground that the certiorari bond has not been approved by the proper officer;¹³ but the writ should not be dismissed for failure of the clerk to approve a bond which has been filed and acted on, and which the judge has approved.¹⁴

Description of judgment. On motion to dismiss the writ because the bond does not properly describe the judgment, the bond may be aided by the petition for the writ and the transcript.¹⁵

1. Absence or Insufficiency of Return or Answer

The writ may be dismissed for a failure to file a return or answer within the time limited therefor; but not for a mere incorrectness or insufficiency therein.

Failure to file a return or answer within the time limited therefor may be ground for dismissing the writ,¹⁶ especially where the petitioner takes no steps to procure a return,¹⁷ but not where it is filed during the first term and before a motion to dismiss is made.¹⁸

Where an answer is properly filed, its incorrectness or insufficiency is no ground for the dismissal of the petition,¹⁹ but the proper remedy for the party complaining is by exception to the answer, as explained supra § 130, and the filing of such exception by plaintiff in certiorari does not constitute an admission that no legal answer has been filed so as to justify a dismissal of his petition.²⁰ If, however, obligation, if an instrument is void as a statutory bond, defendant in certiorari may have the writ dismissed when the bond does not comply with the statutory requirements.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Monroe, 106 S.E. 209, 26 Ga.App. 332. Necessity for bond see supra §§ 90, 91.

notice of such exceptions is not given to the opposite party before the case is called in its order for hearing, certiorari may be dismissed on the ground that no sufficient answer has been made by the trial judge and because of the lack of such notice.²¹

j. Failure to Prosecute

Failure to prosecute the writ with due diligence may be ground for its quashal.

The writ may be quashed for failure to prosecute it with due diligence,²² even after a return is filed,²³ as where there is inexcusable delay in bringing on the argument,²⁴ or failure to file reasons for reversal as required by rules of court,²⁵ or, where it is plaintiff's duty to furnish the record to be reviewed, he fails to use due diligence in having a complete record made out;²⁶ but this rule does not apply where the petitioner has acted in good faith in the belief that he has fully performed his duty, and the transcript is not annexed to the writ because of his failure to pay fees.²⁷

k. Delay in Suing Out or Issuing Writ

Failure to sue out or issue the writ within a reasonable, or the proper, time may be ground for quashing it.

Where the applicant for the writ has been guilty of unreasonable delay in suing out the writ, it generally will be quashed;²⁸ but where it has been allowed and duly prosecuted it will be presumed that the question of delay was considered on the application, and the writ will not thereafter be dismissed for delay in applying for it.²⁹ Likewise the writ will be quashed where it has not been sued out until after the time limited by statute for its issuance;³⁰ and the statute of limitations need not be set up in an answer,³¹ and, in some jurisdictions, it cannot be urged in the return.³² A failure to file the petition within the required time after judgment, however, has been held not to warrant quashing certiorari to review proceedings in an intermediate court on appeal from a lower court.³³

Delay in issuing writ. It is a ground that the writ was not issued within the proper time after its allowance;³⁴ but not where the failure to issue the writ within the proper time after its allowance was occasioned by the fault of the opposite party.³⁵

l. Remedy Unavailing; Moot Question

The writ may be dismissed where the remedy sought becomes unavailing, or the question involved becomes a moot one.

Although properly begun, a writ may be dismissed, if the remedy thereby sought has become unavailing,³⁶ or if the question involved has become merely a moot one.³⁷ A writ to review an order

§ 136. Who May Dismiss

The writ may be dismissed at the instance of one of the parties; or in a proper case the court may dismiss of its own motion.

The court may quash or dismiss the writ on the motion of either party.⁴⁵ As in other proceedings, plaintiff in certiorari may dismiss or discontinue,⁴⁶ and the writ will be dismissed on his motion, on his suggesting to the court that he has released his interest in the subject matter in dispute.⁴⁷ Leave to appear specially for the purpose of making a motion to quash the writ may be granted defendant without the reasons being set out in writing, unless plaintiff objects in which case the reasons for the application should be set forth in a petition.⁴⁸

Dismissal by court on own motion. If at any time the court is advised that the writ has improperly been issued, it may in the exercise of its discretion dismiss the writ on its own motion without any application for dismissal being made by either party,⁴⁹ as where it appears that the proceeding is void,⁵⁰ that the writ was not applied for within a reasonable time,⁵¹ or that the question involved has become moot.⁵² It has been held that, although a motion for dismissal has been made, the court may dismiss for reasons other than those alleged in the motion,⁵³ but there is also authority to the contrary.⁵⁴

§ 137. Loss or Waiver of Right

The right to quash or dismiss a writ of certiorari may be lost or waived by a failure to move in the matter with diligence, or by taking some action inconsistent with the existence of the right.

The right to quash or dismiss may be lost or waived by failure to move with diligence;⁵⁵ but not where the motion is acted on with due diligence, and the delay is partly caused by the court being in vacation.⁵⁶ Where a party aggrieved has a right of review, and the only question is as to the form of the remedy, a motion to dismiss will be denied where not made promptly, but instead after the opposing party has gone to the expense of preparing for the hearing of the cause.⁵⁷

The right to a dismissal, however, is not lost by permitting a motion for an amended return.⁵⁸ Furthermore, a waiver of notice of the sanction of the writ and of the time and place of hearing will not deprive a party of his right to dismiss, if that right has been reserved.⁵⁹ The making of a return does not waive the right to move to dismiss the writ on the ground that the party prosecuting it is not an interested party;⁶⁰ but the answer or return may cure a defect in the petition, as a ground of dismissal, by setting out evidence which the petition failed to set out.⁶¹ Where the petition is void, as by reason of its not being filed within the statutory time, the pendency of a traverse to a void answer will not preclude a dismissal.⁶² The nonobservance of a statute or rule, requiring the filing of an abstract of record, as explained supra § 135 a, as a ground for dismissal, cannot be waived.⁶³

§ 138. Dismissal by Stipulation

The writ may be dismissed on a stipulation of the parties to that effect.

Where the parties stipulated that the proceedings should be dismissed, the dismissal will not be refused merely on the protest of an attorney for one of the parties whom the record does not show will be injured by the dismissal.⁶⁴ An agreement for dismissal, however, made by commissioners individually without any resolution of the board authorizing the agreement is not binding.⁶⁵ A dismissal of the writ on stipulation is not an adjudication that certiorari is plaintiff's only remedy.⁶⁶

a. In General

The proper remedy to supersede or to dismiss or quash a writ of certiorari is by a motion to supersede or a motion to dismiss or quash the writ, in the court of the district to which the writ is returnable.

by a motion to supersede or by a motion to dismiss or quash,⁶⁷ even though the statute makes no provision for such a motion.⁶⁸ Where, under the local practice, an order of certiorari is substituted for the writ, a motion to vacate the order is the proper procedure.⁶⁹ After the issuance of the writ the proper procedure is by motion for the dismissal or quashal of the writ,⁷⁰ and not by demurrer to the petition, as noted supra § 84, or by objection to the jurisdiction of the court.⁷¹

A motion to quash the writ for insufficiency of the petition is tantamount to a demurrer to the petition,⁷² and brings the sufficiency of the application into question;⁷³ and a demurrer filed with the answer may be treated as a motion to quash.⁷⁴ On the other hand an exception to the petition for the writ is equivalent to a motion to dismiss, and a judgment for defendant on such an exception is practically the same as a dismissal;⁷⁵ although it is not the preferred practice to object to the sufficiency of the petition for the writ by exceptions, but a motion should be made to dismiss.⁷⁶

Demurrer to the return. The writ may be quashed for insufficiency of the petition therefor on de-murrer to the return,⁷⁷ under the familiar rule that demurrer may be ousted because of the insufficiency of his own pleading, as explained in the C.J.S. title Pleading § 262, also 49 C.J. p 443 note 55 et seq.

Where made. A motion to dismiss should be made in the district to which the writ is returnable,⁷⁸ in the court having jurisdiction thereof;⁷⁹ except that to save delay it may be directed to be made in another district in which the court is sitting.⁸⁰ It has been held that the motion may be made at chambers.⁸¹

Notice of motion. Proper notice of the motion should be given to the adverse party.⁸²

b. Time for Motion

The motion, generally, should be made not later than the term of court to which the writ is returnable; and, according to local practice, may be made either before or after the return day of the writ.

The time when the motion may be made is largely governed by the local practice,⁸³ although it should be made at the earliest opportunity.⁸⁴ It is generally held that it must be made not later than the term of court to which the writ is returnable,⁸⁵

As fixing limitation of time for filing motion

Statute authorizing adverse party to move to dismiss certiorari at first at least if the application is based on mere irregularities in connection with the issuance of the writ,⁸⁶ and this rule applies although the cause has been continued;⁸⁷ and so, although the writ is returned before the return day.⁸⁸ Furthermore, the fact that a motion is made and overruled at the return term does not authorize a supplemental motion, embracing additional grounds, to be made at a succeeding term.⁸⁹

Where, however, the ground for dismissal is that the writ has been improvidently issued, it may be dismissed after the return term,⁹⁰ and even after entering on the merits of the cause,⁹¹ especially where the writ is issued without a hearing on the understanding that opposing counsel reserves the right to raise objection to the remedy on the hearing on the return of the writ.⁹² Oftentimes, if not generally, however, such a dismissal, on the hearing, is by the court of its own motion.⁹³ Moreover, the rule that the motion to dismiss must be made at the return term does not apply where the grounds on which it is based have arisen after the return term,⁹⁴ or where the moving party did not have earlier notice of the writ or removal of the cause.⁹⁵ Generally, a motion to quash is too late where not made until after the submission of the case.⁹⁶

Before or after return. Whether the motion may or must be made before the return is variously decided in different states. It has been held that the motion may be made before the return of the writ,⁹⁷ and that it cannot be made after the return.⁹⁸ On the other hand, it has been held that the motion may be made after the return,⁹⁹ and that it cannot be heard before a return.¹ In accordance with the distinction noted in § 134, it has been held that, while both motions may be based on the same grounds, yet a motion to supersede may be made before the writ is returned, while a motion to quash can be made only after the return.² Where the motion to dismiss the petition is made after a return, it is in effect a motion for judgment on the pleadings.³

In New York, although the earlier decisions are somewhat conflicting, it is now held that the motion must be made before the return day, where it is in the nature of a demurrer to the petition,⁴ as where it appears on the face of the writ that it is insufficient in law, and that it does not lie to review the acts complained of;⁵ or that it may be made, on the papers on which it was granted or on additional affidavits, either before or after the return there-to.⁶

Before return term. Where the writ has been actually returned, a motion may be made and the term of court to which it is returnable fixes limitation of time for filing motion; and proceedings for certiorari cannot be dismissed on motion filed after expiration of that term.—Scott v. Tate, Tex.Civ.App., 28 S.W.2d 848—11 C.J. p 188 note 39 [a].

Want of prosecution may be taken advantage of by a motion to dismiss made at any time.⁸

c. Motion Papers

The motion should specify the particular grounds relied on for dismissal or quashal; and should be in the form required for motions in general.

The motion papers should be in the form required for motions in general, as explained in C.J.S. title Motions and Orders § 10, also 42 C.J. p 476 note 1—p 479 note 46, and should specify the particular grounds relied on for dismissal or quashal;⁹ and should be made either on the papers on which the writ was granted or on additional affidavits.¹⁰ The motion may be denied where it is not properly entitled.¹¹

Signature. The motion papers must be signed by the proper party.¹² However, an objection that a motion to dismiss is not signed must be made before the court acts on the motion, or else it will be waived.¹³

§ 140. Hearing and Determination of Motion

- a. In general
- b. Conclusiveness of petition and writ
- c. Extrinsic evidence
- d. Determination

a. In General

On the hearing of the motion, the court may generally consider the petition for the writ, the writ, the motion papers, and other matters of record before it.

On the motion coming on for hearing, the court or judge has before it the petition for the writ, the writ, the motion papers, and the return if one has been made. If the record has been returned, it may be referred to and considered in determining the merits of the motion,¹⁴ and consideration of the motion ordinarily should be confined to such record.¹⁵ If the writ commands a certification of a full, true, and complete transcript of all the records, the court is not authorized to pass on a motion to dismiss or quash, without having the entire record before it;¹⁶ but it has been held that the reviewing court is not deprived of its jurisdiction because of a deficiency in the record if the petition has attached to it, as exhibits, copies of the proceedings, and the return in the clerk's office also has such copies.¹⁷ In considering the sufficiency of an affidavit on a motion to dismiss, the affidavit should not be strictly construed.¹⁸

In some states the merits of the writ will not be heard on a motion to quash;¹⁹ and it has been held that only the petition will be considered on such a motion,²⁰ and that where it appears on the face of an order for certiorari that it is insufficient in law, and that a review by certiorari does not lie, the court may quash the order on the moving papers alone.²¹

On the hearing of the motion, the question may be raised and decided whether the petitioner should have pursued some other remedy.²²

Mandamus

Question whether petitioners in certiorari proceeding have mistaken remedy and should have applied for

b. Conclusiveness of Petition and Writ

The allegations of a petition for certiorari, and of the writ, will, ordinarily, be taken as true, on a motion to dismiss the writ.

On a motion to dismiss an application for certiorari, the sufficiency of the petition is tested by the same principles as are used in testing the sufficiency of a pleading demurred to.²³ Accordingly, on a motion to dismiss the petition or to quash the writ, the allegations of the petition are admitted by the motion and considered to be true,²⁴ in so far as they are well pleaded;²⁵ and this rule applies even after a return,²⁶ unless contradicted by the record.²⁷ A general motion is in the nature of a general demurrer, and no question of imperfection in the form of the petition arises thereon.²⁸ Where respondent does not challenge the status of the prosecutor until the argument of the cause, matters of fact on which such status depends will be taken as admitted on a motion then made for the dismissal of the writ.²⁹

Order of certiorari. It has been held that on a motion to vacate an order of certiorari, heard on the order and return, the court need not accept the petition as true,³⁰ but that the facts stated in the petition together with the inferences to be drawn therefrom will be viewed in their most favorable light.³¹

Writ. The allegations of the writ will also be taken to be true,³² and with the return will be considered as conclusively establishing the facts stated therein.³³

c. Extrinsic Evidence

On motion to dismiss the writ for insufficiency of the petition, evidence dehors the record is, generally, inadmissible to disprove the allegations of the petition, although it may be admitted under other circumstances.

On a motion to dismiss because of the insufficiency of the petition, its allegations, as stated supra § 140 b, are taken as true, and, generally, it is not permissible to read affidavits or other extrinsic evidence to disprove such allegations;³⁴ and it has been held that it is not proper to regard the facts stated by the justice in his transcript in opposition to those set out and sworn to in the petition.³⁵ However, under some circumstances, as where facts showing that the writ was improperly issued are not apparent from an inspection of the record, matters dehors the record may be considered,³⁶ and in some states affidavits or other extrinsic evidence is proper to aid the court in the exercise of its discretion.³⁷ It has been held that the testimony of both parties on an application to quash a writ of attachment which was returned with the writ may be considered, and the facts deducible therefrom determined.³⁸ Affidavits may be read on the motion, by agreement of the parties.³⁹

Burden of proof to show compliance

On motion to dismiss certiorari, because written notice of the sanction of the writ and of the time and place of hearing was not given, as required by statute, the burden is on plaintiff in certiorari to show compliance with such provision.—*Ivey v. d. Determination

The court should determine, from the facts presented, whether or not the writ should be dismissed or quashed, and, if in its discretion, it grants or denies the motion, it should make an order accordingly.

On a motion to dismiss the writ, the court must first determine whether it appears from the petition that a prima facie case is established which would, under any possible interpretation of the facts as therein alleged, warrant the appellate court in answering questions made by the petitioner in the affirmative.⁴⁰ If it is apparent that the inferior tribunal acted within its jurisdiction and proceeded regularly, the writ will be quashed, especially if a further hearing would necessarily result in an affirmation of the determination below.⁴¹ So, if the writ fails to show facts which would justify any action other than that taken below, it is properly quashed, when its insufficiency in that respect is brought to the attention of the court;⁴² and the writ should also be dismissed where the material facts stated in the petition are contradicted by the return;⁴³ but it should not be dismissed, after proper allowance and issue, unless justice clearly demands that course.⁴⁴ The motion may be denied, and an amendment allowed, without prejudice to the right to renew the motion on the amended petition.⁴⁵

Discretion of court. Since the issuance of the writ is to a great extent discretionary, as stated supra §§ 10-16, a motion to quash is generally addressed to the discretion of the court, and will be granted or denied accordingly.⁴⁶ Where, however, the petition is void, the court has power only to dismiss it and enter judgment for costs on the certiorari bonds, and a judgment against the petitioner and his sureties for the amount recovered below is erroneous,⁴⁷ and error in refusing to dismiss the writ, in such a case, renders further proceedings in the case nugatory.⁴⁸ Where two cases are consolidated but the motion to dismiss is entitled, numbered, and filed in one case, while the brief in opposition to the motion is entitled, numbered, and filed in the record of the other case, the court may, of its own motion, order the redocketing of both cases to correct the error.⁴⁹

Order of dismissal. In the absence of statute, the court on granting a motion to dismiss, generally, should merely order the dismissal of the writ and give judgment for costs against the prosecutor of the writ, and should not enter a new judgment;⁵⁰ but where on a motion to dismiss on the ground of moot questions, plaintiff's sole reply is that such dismissal might affect his rights in another case, the court, in sustaining the motion, may expressly provide that the judgment shall be without prejudice to plaintiff in certiorari in any other case;⁵¹ and where the certiorari presents only a question of law, the superior court should terminate it by a final judgment.⁵²

Nunc pro tunc order. An order denying a motion to dismiss a writ may be entered nunc pro tunc on renewal of the motion at a subsequent term on the same ground;⁵³ and a nunc pro tunc order quashing the writ may be entered from the minutes kept by the judge and the clerk at the time the original order was directed to be entered.⁵⁴

Reasons assigned by court. Where the writ is properly quashed, it is immaterial that wrong reasons are given by the court therefor,⁵⁵ or that good grounds are considered insufficient;⁵⁶ and the court may dismiss the writ on grounds other than those assigned in the motion, as stated supra § 136.

Retention of writ to prevent delay. Where quashing would simply remit the parties to another proceeding and result in useless delay, the writ may be retained for a hearing.⁵⁷

In the absence of statute, the court, on dismissing or quashing the writ of certiorari should award a writ of procedendo.

Except where the practice is changed by statute requiring the court, on dismissal, to enter judgment for the amount of the judgment below,⁵⁸ the court on dismissing or quashing a writ of certiorari, instead of rendering a new judgment, should award a writ of procedendo,⁵⁹ which is a notification to the inferior court that the supersedeas has been vacated, and an authorization to proceed with the execution of its judgment.⁶⁰

§ 142. Effect of Dismissal

After dismissal of the writ it, generally, can have no operation or effect on the original proceedings.

After dismissal of the writ it can have no operation or effect on the original proceedings,⁶¹ the dismissal leaves the judgment of the inferior tribunal in full force.⁶² Where, however, the time for trial of the original proceeding has, in the meantime, expired, the court in dismissing the writ on the ground that no cause therefor existed, may extend the time for trial.⁶³

I. HEARING AND REHEARING

§ 143. In General

The determination complained of by certiorari should not be reviewed without a hearing on the writ before a competent court, the time, place, and scope of such hearing being governed, generally, by the local practice.

The determination complained of, by certiorari, should not be reviewed without a hearing;⁶⁴ and, where certiorari is presented within the time provided by law, it is error to dismiss it without hearing the merits.⁶⁵ Accordingly, after certiorari is issued and the record brought up, the superior court may hear the case when the facts call for judicial intervention, although there is other adequate relief;⁶⁶ and, although the question involved has become a moot one, if the matter of costs remains to be adjudicated and depends on the merits, the superior court will consider the case.⁶⁷

of competent jurisdiction in the case,⁶⁸ and, where the jurisdiction of a particular court of such hearing is exclusive, jurisdiction thereof by another court cannot be conferred by consent.⁶⁹

On such hearing, in some states, nothing can be considered but the petition and the answer.⁷⁰ Where the record of the inferior court which issued the writ is returned, the trial should be had on the record;⁷¹ and it is generally improper to form and try any issues of fact,⁷² or to consider any evidence relating to the original proceeding as heard on the trial.⁷³ In other states, however, the practice is to hear the merits of the case and practically to decide the whole case on the granting or refusing of the writ,⁷⁴ and evidence of extrinsic facts alleged in the return may be admitted, unless the facts are not controverted.⁷⁵ In such states the petitioner may attack the jurisdiction of the inferior tribunal, and may, if necessary, introduce evidence to support his contention.⁷⁶

Stipulated case. The hearing may be had on a stipulated case, provided all persons whose rights are to be determined are parties thereto.⁷⁷

Consolidation of writs. Separate writs involving the same rights and interests may be consolidated on the hearing and all issues tried at the same time.⁷⁸

Time and place of hearing. The time of the hearing may be fixed by notice,⁷⁹ by the local practice,⁸⁰ or by the order of the court.⁸¹ It may be had at the time and place the order to show cause is returnable⁸² or on the return day of the writ,⁸³ but, unless by consent, not before.⁸⁴ Under some statutes any disposition on the merits of a certiorari is premature until a traverse has been properly disposed of; and a judgment on the certiorari in advance of a disposition of the traverse is void.⁸⁵ The failure, however, of the court to hear and determine the certiorari within a given period cannot operate to deprive the petitioner of any substantial right, especially where the court's delay is not attributable to any fault of the petitioner.⁸⁶

Transfer of hearing. Under a statute authorizing the superior court to transfer for hearing, from one division of the court to another, cases which the court has not had time to decide before adjourning in a particular division, where the court is unable to consider and decide a certiorari proceeding before the end of its sitting, it may grant a transfer of the hearing to another division, in order to secure an earlier disposition of the case, and such a transfer may be made, although the parties do not consent thereto.⁸⁷

Decision on hearing. On such hearing the submission, on the petition for certiorari and demurrers thereto, may be set aside to permit an amendment of the petition.⁸⁸ Where the decision of the inferior court affirmatively shows a misapplication of the law as to the facts as found by the court, but the judgment is correct notwithstanding such error, the superior court may render an opinion correcting such error, although certiorari is denied;⁸⁹ but in denying certiorari to review certain orders the court need not express an opinion as to the validity of the orders,⁹⁰ and denying the petition

On certiorari to quash proceeding of board

Where return to petition for a writ of certiorari to quash proceedings of a board of aldermen in taking land by eminent domain alleged extrinsic facts to show that substantial justice did not require that the proceedings be quashed, evidence might have been admissible, if such facts were disputed; but, if not controverted, the hearing rightly may have proceeded on the footing that they were true.—Byfield v. City of Newton, 141 N.E. 658, 247 Mass. 46.

Burden of proof

In denying certiorari to review orders directing payments by a special administrator which had been already made, the appellate court will not express its opinion for the benefit of the lower court as to the va-

without an opinion is not to be deemed an approval of all the statements of law by the inferior court.⁹¹ Where, under the local practice, order of certiorari has been substituted for writ thereof, if the petition, although for a writ, contains all the necessary averments for an order of certiorari, the writ should be vacated and the order granting it amended so as to provide for the issuance of an order of certiorari, and the title, proceeding, petition, and all necessary papers may be amended to conform to the proper practice.⁹²

A continuance may be granted in a proper case.⁹³

§ 144. Notice of Hearing

Notice of the time and place of the hearing must generally be given, as required by statute or rule of court.

Notice, as required by statute or rule of court, must be given of the time and place of the hearing,⁹⁴ but failure to give notice may be cured by an appearance,⁹⁵ or excused because of the action of the adverse party.⁹⁶ It has been held that the notice cannot be served until after the return day mentioned in the writ.⁹⁷

Notice of sanction of writ and of hearing. Under some statutes, plaintiff in certiorari is required to give notice to the opposite party in interest of the sanction of the writ and also of the time and place of hearing, at least ten days before the sitting of the court to which the writ is returnable.⁹⁸ Failure to give such notice renders the entire proceeding void, where proper exception is taken,⁹⁹ and the writ must be dismissed therefor,¹ if not served before the expiration of the time prescribed,² unless such notice is waived,³ or its giving is prevented by an unavoidable cause.⁴

The notice, to be sufficient, must be at least, in substantial compliance with the statute.⁵ It must be served on the proper persons,⁶ and where a mu-

The notice may be established on the hearing of the petition for certiorari, by proper proof, otherwise than by an acknowledgment of service or other proof of notice appearing in the petition itself.¹⁰

Acknowledgment and waiver. An entry on a petition for certiorari, after sanction thereof, acknowledging service of notice of the sanction of the writ and waiving further notice constitutes an acknowledgment of notice of sanction of the writ, and also waiver of notice of the time and place of hearing,¹¹ and where such acknowledgment and waiver is made more than ten days before the sitting of the court, as required by the statute, it is error to dismiss the certiorari for want of notice.¹² However, there is no such acknowledgment and waiver of notice where such entry is made on the petition before it is sanctioned.¹³ Acknowledgment of legal service of the sanction of the writ, without referring to the time and place of hearing is insufficient to prevent dismissal of the certiorari on motion.¹⁴

The certificate of service must be dated¹⁵ and verified.¹⁶ A traverse of the sheriff's return of service of such notice is a nullity if the sheriff is not made a party thereto.¹⁷

§ 145. Briefs

Briefs should be filed within the time prescribed by statute or rule of court.

Briefs required by statute or rule of court must be filed within the time therein specified,¹⁸ or, in the absence of such requirement, in the time for filing briefs in ordinary appeals.¹⁹ A statutory provision that certiorari shall not be awarded except on a petition duly sworn, and accompanied by assignments of error and a brief in support thereof,

Notice to sheriff

Where defendant to an action in a city court traverses the sheriff's entry of service, and the issue is found against the traverse, and thereupon defendant sues out a writ of certiorari, designating as the adverse parties thereto plaintiff in the original action and the sheriff, it is necessary that notice of the sanction of the writ of certiorari and of the time and place of hearing the same be given to the sheriff, and, in default of such notice to him, the certiorari will be dismissed, on motion of the other defendant therein.—Georgia, etc., R. Co. v. McElroy, 35 S.E. 297, 110 Ga. 316.

Notice held insufficient

In certiorari against a city, leaving the petition and writ of certiorari at the office of the mayor of the city, and serving the solicitor general with a copy in the case, is not a giving of notice of the time and place of hearing as required by statute.—Darby v. City of Ball Ground, 187 S.E. 120, 53 Ga.App. 700.

Sending of registered letter containing notice of the sanction of a writ of certiorari and of the hearing, addressed to defendant and delivered at his home and receipted for by his son, who delivered it to defendant's wife, who lost it without opening it, was not sufficient notice.—Wilber Stock Food Co. v. Wesley, 80 S.E. 677, 14 Ga.App. 179.

Written acknowledgment of service signed by attorney for defendant in certiorari, reciting that the written notice required by statute has been made, is sufficient.—McDaniel v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, 142 S.E. 178, 37 Ga.App. 782.

Unauthorized acknowledgment and waiver

The clerk of the board of councilmen of a city had no authority to acknowledge service for the city of a notice of the sanction of a writ of certiorari and waive further notice, especially where the waiver of service was not in writing.—Ivey v. City of Warrenton, 113 S.E. 114, 28 Ga.App. 749.

Filing held insufficient

No brief was filed with petition for certiorari as required by Sup.Ct. Pract. Rules, rule 42, 193 Ala. xiv, xv, 77 South. vii, where there was simply an indorsement on the petition, "We hereby respectfully refile our briefs heretofore filed both on the direct appeal to the Court of Appeals and also upon a motion for the rehearing in said court, and we will not inflict upon this court another brief in the premises."—Ex parte Locklear, 37 So. 712, 205 Ala. 236, dismissing petition for certiorari Locklear v. State, 37 So. 708, 17 Ala.App. 597.

Rule of court not applicable

A rule of court providing that, on the final hearing of any application for an original writ, each side shall furnish written or printed copies of their points and authorities, applies only on the final hearing on the application for the writ, and on the final hearing on the merits of a writ of certiorari, briefs must be filed in the time prescribed for the filing of briefs in ordinary appeals.—State ex rel. Gilbert v. Moore, 31 P. 713, 5 Wash. 205.

Briefs on appeal generally see Appeal and Error §§ 1311-1345.

requires the assignments of error and brief to be filed contemporaneously with the petition.²⁰ The writ, however, will not be rescinded for a failure to file a brief within a given period, where there is no law or rule of court imposing such a penalty.²¹ Reasons not argued in the brief will be regarded as waived or abandoned.²²

A party having a private interest to maintain the proceeding sought to be quashed by certiorari may be permitted to file a brief and argue in opposition to the petition.²³

§ 146. Rehearing

A rehearing may be granted where the proceeding has been improperly determined or disposed of.

A rehearing may usually be granted,²⁴ and should be granted where the proceeding has been improperly dismissed,²⁵ or where a party thereto has not been given an opportunity to present his evidence.²⁶ A rehearing, however, should not be granted to permit new questions to be raised;²⁷ especially where such questions are raised after the expiration of the period for the issuance of certiorari;²⁸ nor should it be granted to permit questions, previously raised, to be presented anew,²⁹ nor because of the discovery of new evidence,³⁰ nor where the court has no jurisdiction to hear the cause anew.³¹ So, also, a reinstatement after a decision on the merits will not be allowed for the purpose of permitting the defeated party to take fresh proofs.³² A certiorari petition will not be remanded for amendment, on a petition for a rehearing.³³ The unsuccessful party cannot complain because the inferior court has complied with the determination above without affording him an opportunity for a rehearing.³⁴

On a rehearing the cause must be submitted on the record as it was on the former submission, although several affidavits have been filed since the rehearing was granted,³⁵ and the prior decision will be adhered to where all debatable questions have been there disposed of.³⁶

The pendency of an application for rehearing after decision prevents the judgment from becoming final; and, even though the rehearing is granted in terms restricting it to particular issues, the whole case remains under the court's control.³⁷

Reargument

Petitioner who successfully contended that supreme court on certiorari should consider board's rulings as to validity of only ten ballots, although other ballots were in supreme court's custody, is not entitled to reargument, requested almost one month after decision, where reargument was sought as to considerable number of such other ballots and not as to any of the ten ballots.—Heffernan v. Board of Canvassers of City of Warwick, R.I., 177 A. 142, denying reargument 175 A. 660.

J. REVIEW ON CERTIORARI

§ 147. Scope and Extent in General

The scope and extent of the review on certiorari is largely dependent on local practice or statute, the important questions to be considered, generally, being: Whether the review is limited to jurisdictional questions; whether questions of fact are reviewable; whether matters outside the record may be considered; and whether statements in the return or record are conclusive. On certiorari to quash a conflicting opinion of an inferior appellate court, the reviewing court generally is limited to the determination of such conflict.

There is much confusion with regard to the scope of review on certiorari. This is caused: (1) By a conflict between the decisions in different states, induced to some extent by statutory provisions; (2) by the fact that early decisions in particular states have been to some extent abrogated by later statutes; and (3) for the reason that in several states the language of the decisions is so obscure that it is practically impossible to state what is the rule therein. The important questions to be considered, as stated in following sections, are: (1) Whether the review is limited to jurisdictional questions, infra § 151; (2) whether questions of fact are reviewable, infra § 172; (3) whether matters outside the record can be considered, infra §§ 157-164; and (4) whether statements in the return or record are conclusive, infra §§ 165-169.

The reviewing court may, in a proper case, dispose of all relevant matters;³⁸ but it will not review a matter which was not finally determined in the lower court,³⁹ or which has become an abstract or moot question;⁴⁰ nor need it consider matters not necessary to a proper determination.⁴¹ Where two cases are consolidated, and the court renders separate findings and judgments, this will be regarded as being at most misprision or inadvertence, and the reviewing court will consider the case as though there were a single set of findings and one judgment.⁴²

The scope of the review depends largely on the statute involved.⁴³ The reviewing court, generally, will not review the case as if before it on broad appeal;⁴⁴ and, on the other hand, the fact that there is no right of appeal generally does not enlarge the scope of review on certiorari or writ of review.⁴⁵ Where, however, a statute is merely silent on the question of appeal, a review may be had in the broadest sense of certiorari;⁴⁶ and under some statutes, where certiorari is granted by the supreme court to review a judgment of an inferior appellate court, the cause proceeds as if pending on writ of error.⁴⁷

Case which should have been transferred transfer the cause as required by Acts 1909 c 192, consider the case as on appeal.—Going v. Going, 256 S.W. 890, 148 Tenn. 522, 31 A.L.R. 633.

47. Ill.—Freitag v. Union Stock Yard, etc., Co., 104 N.E. 901, 262 Ill. 551.

As limited by constitutional provision

Under a constitutional provision authorizing the legislature to provide for review by appeal or writ of

On certiorari to an intermediate appellate court, the reviewing court ordinarily considers only questions treated by the intermediate court,⁴⁸ and its review does not extend to irregularities or errors of the original trial court, as explained infra § 152.

Collateral matters. The reviewing court is confined to an inquiry into the regularity of the particular proceedings brought up by the writ, and acts done by any other tribunal than that to which the writ issued, proceedings subsequent to or collateral with those which are complained of, and proceedings in which the petitioner for the writ is not interested, should be disregarded.⁴⁹ It is not concerned with the judgment as affecting parties who do not apply for relief;⁵⁰ and, where the writ brings up for review the removal of the relator from office, the validity of the appointment of his successor will not be considered.⁵¹

Certiorari to quash conflicting opinion in inferior appellate court. On certiorari to quash the opinion of an inferior appellate court because of its being in conflict with a previous decision of the supreme court, except as to the question of jurisdiction,⁵² the sole inquiry of the supreme court is whether the rulings and conclusions of law in the opinion of the inferior court, on the same or a similar state of facts as found by it and on the issue as stated by it, conflict with and contravene the last previous controlling decision of the supreme court.⁵³ On such review, the supreme court is concerned only with error, a statute making judgments of an inferior court final, unless a majority of the judges thereof grant a certificate of importance and appeal, or unless the higher court, by certiorari or otherwise, requires the case to be certified for review, contemplates, not a review of such a judgment by certiorari, but that the application for such a writ is to enable the higher court to determine whether the case ought to be reviewed, and that where the writ is awarded the review is by writ of error.—Freitag v. Union Stock Yard, etc., Co., supra.

Power to rule on assignments of error

(1) Under a constitutional provision authorizing supreme court to require by certiorari, etc., any case to be certified from court of appeals for review as if carried by writ of error to supreme court, the supreme court on certiorari has jurisdiction to rule upon the several assignments of error made by bill of exceptions.—Gulf Paving Co. v. City of Atlanta, 99 S.E. 374, 149 Ga. 114, reversing 96 S.E. 392, 22 Ga.App. 374, conformed to 99 S.E. 538, 24 Ga.App. 4.

(2) On certiorari to the court of appeals, assignment of error complaining of affirmance on defendant's cross bill need not be decided, when it is held that the court erred in reversing judgment for defendant on the main bill.—Globe & Rutgers Fire Ins. Co. v. Smyly, 117 S.E. 819, 155 Ga. 547, reversing Smyly v. Globe & Rutgers Fire Ins. Co., 113 S.E. 220, 28 Ga.App. 776, conformed to 118 S.E. 766, 30 Ga.App. 620.

Prior order

On certiorari to review an order annexing territory to a school district, the inquiry will be confined to the order sought to be reviewed and will not be extended to a prior order under which defendants claimed a legal annexation.—*State v. Writ granted to one party

Where writ of certiorari or review is granted at instance of one party to suit to consider a complaint of a judgment of the court of appeal, an opposing party who has not applied for writ of review cannot have the judgment amended for his benefit, but judgment of supreme court will be confined to complaint of party at whose instance the writ of review was granted.—*D. Inadvertent statement

Inadvertence of the inferior court in stating that there was personal service cannot be made the basis of quashing any part of its record on certiorari, where it based no argument and no conclusion on any distinction between personal and constructive service, and the conclusion it reached could not be affected by any difference between the two kinds of service.—State ex rel Hayes v. Ruling by necessary implication

When opinion of court of appeals necessarily rests on a finding or determination by such court, whether discussed or not, which must have been consistent with opinion rendered, or no judgment of character rendered could have been legally rendered, court of appeals must be held to have considered the question whether it discussed it or not, since it is necessarily and unavoidably involved in decision reached.—State ex rel. Construction of instrument

On certiorari to quash opinion of court of appeals for conflict, where court of appeals found employer's indemnity policy ambiguous and construed it, it was for supreme court to determine whether substantial reason for doubt and uncertainty with respect to the meaning of the instrument existed.—State ex rel. Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation v. Hostetter, Mo., 108 S.W. 2d 17.

Construction of statute

(1) An opinion of the court of appeals construing a statute and giving it a certain force and effect cannot be called in question by certiorari to the supreme court, unless the supreme court has in some case on similar facts given the same statute a definite construction which the court of appeals in the instant case refuses to follow, since the proper construction of any statute is as much within the province of the court of appeals as of the supreme court.—State ex rel. and to Use of Heuring v. Allen, Sup., 112 S.W.2d 843, quashing opinion and record Heuring v. Central States Life Ins. Co. of St. Louis, 87 S.W.2d 661, 230 Mo.App. 42.

(2) The supreme court has no authority to decide whether an automatic loan provision of life policy sued on was in conflict with non-forfeiture statute or whether such provision conflicted with extent provision, where court of appeals had jurisdiction of the appeal, since such questions would have to be decided in that court.—State ex rel. and to Use of Heuring v. Allen, supra.

Where facts not similar

Misapplication by court of appeals of rules announced in supreme court decisions does not constitute error cognizable on certiorari in the supreme court, where the facts are in no way analogous to the facts in supreme court cases.—State ex rel Calhoun v. late court;⁵⁷ and, in the absence of a conflict, it is bound by the inferior court's rulings on questions of law, whether right or wrong, but not by its ruling as to the dissimilarity of the facts in its decision from those in previous decisions of the supreme court, or as to certain evidence being contrary to physical laws and facts of universal knowledge.⁵⁸ In determining conflicts, the decisions must be read and understood in the light of the facts and questions presented;⁵⁹ but it is not the province of the supreme court to reconcile alleged inconsistencies in the inferior court's decision, where the matters complained of are not necessary to the decision of issues there presented and joined.⁶⁰

The supreme court also is not concerned with any conflict between the opinion of the inferior court and the opinions of other like courts or of courts of a foreign jurisdiction.⁶¹ No question concerning the correctness of a controlling opinion of the supreme court which the inferior court's decision has followed can be reviewed;⁶² nor will supreme court decisions subsequent to the opinion under review be considered, since there can be no conflict with such decisions.⁶³

Ordinarily it is for the relator to point out conflicts, not for the reviewing court to search for them;⁶⁴ but where the supreme court has acquired jurisdiction it may consider conflicts not suggested by the relator and may, of its own motion, point out conflicts,⁶⁵ and is not limited to the determination of a conflict with a case cited, but may determine whether there is a conflict with the last previous ruling as to any case.⁶⁶ The supreme court, however, is not concerned with mere possible

Trimble, 253 S.W. 1014, 300 Mo. 92, quashing opinion Vulgamott v. Payne, App., 245 S.W. 592.

Partial attack of opinion

Although the relator advances no reason sufficient to justify the questioning of part of an opinion, and although the conclusion reached by the court in such part of the opinion logically justifies its judgment, without regard to other questions, it is the supreme court's duty to examine other assailed portions of the opinion.—State ex rel. Hayes v. Ellison, Mo., 191 S.W. 49.

Cases not cited in brief

That cases with which court of appeals' opinion conflicts were not cited in briefs filed on certiorari to quash opinion is not material.—State ex rel. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. of Boston, Mass. v. Allen, 282 S.W. 46, 313 Mo. 384, quashing opinion conflicts of decisions, but there must be an actual conflict between statements of general principles of law clearly intended as such, or between rulings necessary to the matter presented for decision.⁶⁷

A party who did not apply for the writ, but who was required by the opinion to consent to a remittitur as a condition to affirmance, may suggest that such provision conflicts with the decisions of the supreme court.⁶⁸

§ 148. Matter Which Should Have Been Urged by Motion

Matters which should have been urged by motion in the lower court, and were not, have been held not reviewable.

It has been held that certain matters which could be raised by a motion to dismiss the writ before hearing, if not so urged, will be disregarded on the hearing.⁶⁹ Thus it has been held that the objection that the officer granting the writ was not such an officer as had authority to grant it must be raised by a motion to dismiss and cannot be considered on the hearing.⁷⁰

Motion for new trial. A motion for a new trial, which is overruled, presents nothing for decision on certiorari, unless it alleges submissible fact questions;⁷¹ and it has been held that error, if any, in overruling a plea in abatement, which is not made the subject of a motion for a new trial is not reviewable on certiorari.⁷² A motion for a new trial, however, has been held not necessary to review the lower court's action on evidence not bearing on issues submitted to the jury.⁷³

§ 149. Questions or Objections Not Raised in Original Proceeding

Objections not raised or decided in the lower court ordinarily will not be considered on review, except as to questions of public policy or jurisdiction.

The rule applicable to appellate procedure generally, that objections not raised in the lower court cannot be relied on in the appellate court; as announced in the title Appeal and Error § 228 et seq, governs the review on certiorari; and, as a general rule, questions not raised or ruled on below, or alleged erroneous action as to which no objection was made, cannot be presented to, or considered by, the reviewing court.⁷⁴ This rule applies

As basis for quashing record

Contentions not presented to or decided by the court of appeals cannot be made the basis of a ruling quashing its record on certiorari, on the ground its opinion is in conflict with controlling decisions of the supreme court.—State ex rel. City of St. Joseph v. Ellison, Mo., 223 S.W. 671, quashing certiorari Bradford v. City of St. Joseph, App., 214 S.W. 281.

As to signature to judgment

Plaintiff in error who invoked jurisdiction of court of appeals on ground that circuit court had entered final judgment could not, on opponent's certiorari proceeding in supreme court, predicate any rights on fact, not objected to before, that minute entry containing final judgment was not signed until later.—Southern Continental Telephone Co. v. Alley, 72 S.W.2d 555, 167 Tenn. 561.

Defect in pleading or proceeding

Whether complaint states no cause of action because of failure to show that suit was brought within statutory period will not be considered on certiorari, where such defect was not pleaded or brought to attention of courts below, nor to that of Supreme Court in opposing petition for certiorari.—Lynch v. U. S., Ga., 54 S.Ct. 840, 292 U.S. 571, 78 L.Ed. 1434, reversing, C.C.A., 67 F.2d 490, certiorari granted 54 S.Ct. 641, 292 U.S. 616, 78 L.Ed. 1474—Wilner v. U. Defense of void contract

Defense that contract sued on by foreign corporation was void because plaintiff was unlawfully doing business in state not raised by answer or demurrer, is waived and cannot be considered for the first time on certiorari.—J. B. Colt Co. v. District Court of Fifth Judicial Dist. in and for Millard County, 269 P. 1017, 72 Utah 281.

Questions raised for the first time in briefs of counsel for plaintiff in error will not be considered on review.—Payne v. Cheshire, 108 S.E. 207, 27 Ga.App. 324.

Validity of judgment

Modifications of rule. The general rule that objections not raised below will not be considered on review is subject to the modifications that errors complained of will be considered on review on certiorari, although not raised below, where they involve questions of public policy,⁸⁴ or a rule of substantive law,⁸⁵ or, generally, where they go to the jurisdiction of the lower court,⁸⁶ although there is also authority to the contrary.⁸⁷ Questions or objections not raised below may also be examined so far as may be necessary to ascertain that no error was committed by the lower court so plain or apparent as to warrant its consideration on such a state of the record.⁸⁸ A void judgment may be attacked on certiorari although the point invalidating it is raised for the first time in the petition for certiorari.⁸⁹

The claim of exclusive federal jurisdiction will not be recognized as a basis for review by certiorari unless the question has been raised in the trial court and presented as a basis of the writ, where the state appellate tribunal is circumscribed in its discussion of the case to errors appearing on the record, unless the question presented is one dealing with the jurisdiction of the court or general policy of the state.⁹⁰

Questions considered in intermediate court. Where the questions were considered in an intermediate appellate court as sufficiently presenting the questions of law argued, the reviewing court will not refuse to consider them on the ground that they were not sufficiently presented and pressed in the trial court.⁹¹

§ 150. Errors Not Assigned or Urged in Argument or Brief

The reviewing court, ordinarily, will consider only such errors as are properly assigned and presented.

Agreement between counsel or litigants is not a legal substitute for verification of petition for certiorari by answer of trial magistrate.—Powell v. A. J. Fowler & Son, 129 S.E. 13, 34 Ga.App. 186.

As to existence of judgment

Where in application for certiorari error is assigned on alleged judgment, and judge in answer does not adopt as true or verify allegations in application but sends up attached to answer a verified copy of proceedings in his court, and it is shown therein that judgment complained of was in fact rendered, procedure is a sufficient verification of existence of judgment; but where the judge stated in answer that true copies of proceedings were certified as true and sent up, but record failed to show that copies of proceedings were attached to answer, existence of alleged judgment was not verified, and hence nothing was pre-cannot raise a question on review unless he petitions for relief and assigns error on the point;⁹⁶ and where such a party does not petition for certiorari he cannot question the correctness of a part of the judgment or decree which is not challenged.⁹⁷

The rule, however, that the reviewing court will consider only errors which have been properly assigned and presented, is inapplicable on a trial de novo in the reviewing court,⁹⁸ although, as stated infra § 170, it must confine its inquiry to the grounds of attack stated in the petition. So, when necessary to the furtherance of justice, the court will notice substantial error, although it was not made the subject of objection or exception,⁹⁹ as where it is apparent that the inferior tribunal or officer had no jurisdiction,¹ or had exceeded its jurisdiction,² or that the aggrieved party had no opportunity to object.³

Points not urged in argument or brief. Matters not referred to or urged in the arguments or briefs of counsel will not be considered;⁴ and where the

sent to superior court for decision.—Beavers v. Cassells, 192 S.E. 249, 56 Ga.App. 146.

Negative reference not verification

Since exceptions in petition for certiorari were not alleged to have been grounds of oral motion for new trial, and since uncertainties and ambiguities in answer cannot be resolved in favor of petitioner, bare negative reference in answer to certain specified grounds as not having been urged cannot be taken by implication as verification and positive affirmation that other exceptions were actually urged.—Reese v. Miller, 126 S.E. 904, 33 Ga.App. 442.

Sufficiency of verification

(1) Allegations of petition for certiorari are not verified by magistrate's answer which ignores or expressly denies them.—Partridge v. Wilkerson, 163 S.E. 303, 45 Ga.App. 65.—New Zealand Ins. Co. v. Brewer, 116 S.E. 922, 29 Ga.App. 610.

(2) Allegations in petition for certiorari as to giving of charges limiting the issue to particular question were not verified by answer, stating that court did not remember the charge verbatim, but remembered that he made it clear that such question was gist of contentions.—Cochran v. Anderson, 118 S.E. 450, 30 Ga.App. 427.

(3) A petition for certiorari was sufficiently verified by an answer which adopted the magistrate's answer to a former petition, complaining of the same rulings and containing the same statements, where no exception was taken to the superior court's order allowing such irregular answer.—Georgia, R., etc., Co. v. High, 82 S.E. 932, 15 Ga.App. 243.

Acquiescence in judgment

Where defendant, who appealed to district court, acquiesced in its judgment overruling appellee's motion to dismiss appeal and does not ask any relief on appellee's certiorari, supreme court need not consider correctness of rejecting defendant's demand that suit be dismissed because abandoned.—Reagan v. Louisiana Western R. Co., 79 So. 328, 143 La. 754.

Facts conceded to be true

Where plaintiff in ieri facias, in his petition for certiorari, set out grounds of affidavit of illegality, and alleged that they involved only issues of law, and on that ground assigned error in overruling its motion to strike grounds of affidavit and in sustaining affidavit, judge of superior court was authorized to consider that grounds of affidavit were conceded to be true.—*Bellinger v. a. General Rule

Review on certiorari, in most states, is generally limited to questions relating to the jurisdiction, or proper exercise of the jurisdiction, of the inferior tribunal.

On a writ of certiorari the review, in most states, in the absence of statutory or judicial enlargement of the functions of the common-law writ, will be confined to questions disclosed by the record relating to the jurisdiction of the inferior tribunal, or the proper and regular exercise of such jurisdiction,⁶ at the time the order or judgment complained of was made,⁷ in a proceeding in which the writ of certiorari may be used,⁸ and, under some statutes,

As to disbarment decree

On certiorari by disbarred attorney to review action of district court in reinstating original decree of disbarment and in refusing further to modify it, etc., sole question is whether judges exceeded their authority.—Maxey v. Polk County District Court, 165 N.W. 1005, 182 Iowa 366.

Jurisdiction of commissioners

On certiorari to review the action of a board of county commissioners, the only questions for determination are as to whether, on the record presented, the commissioners acquired jurisdiction to proceed to a hearing, and whether if they had jurisdiction, they exceeded it in making the order complained of.—State v. Board of Com'rs of Big Horn County, 273 P. 290, 83 Mont. 540.

Ruling releasing property from attachment is not reviewable on certiorari except to the extent to which jurisdictional questions may be involved.—Ray v. Cox, 30 P.2d 1062, 83 Utah 499.

Order vacating judgment

On certiorari to review the action of a district court in vacating a default judgment, the supreme court is concerned, not with the trial court's jurisdiction at the time of the original judgment, but with its jurisdiction when the order vacating the judgment was made.

where a right of appeal is not given.⁹ Under this general rule the action of the inferior tribunal sought to be reviewed is generally final and conclusive on every question, except questions of jurisdiction.¹⁰

It is obvious, however, that where certiorari is permitted to issue on grounds other than those affecting the existence or exercise of jurisdiction, as announced supra §§ 23, 24, the review is not confined strictly to jurisdictional questions.¹¹ Stated in another way, the rule in most states is that the reviewing court cannot review mere errors of law, where the court has jurisdiction and is not acting in excess of its jurisdiction.¹² Excess of jurisdiction is to be distinguished from errors of law or fact committed by the inferior tribunal within the limits of its jurisdiction;¹³ and mere errors or irregularities in arriving at the result and making the order complained of,¹⁴ such as an order relating to the dismissal of an appeal, as stated supra § 23, or an order vacating another order,¹⁵ are generally not reviewable on certiorari, where the court acted within its jurisdiction, provided the jurisdictional facts appear.¹⁶ This rule also precludes the review of mere errors of an inferior "appellate" court,¹⁷ and limits the scope of the review to the consideration of questions relating to the jurisdiction of the "appellate" court.¹⁸

Effect of appearance. If a party has submitted his person to the jurisdiction of a court, on appeal, he cannot thereafter, by certiorari, question the jurisdiction of that court to determine the appeal.¹⁹

b. Minority Rule

Review on certiorari, in some states, extends to the determination of illegalities or irregularities, and includes a review of errors or issues of law.

In some states, either by virtue of statutory provisions or by local practice, a review on certiorari is not limited to questions relating to the jurisdiction of the inferior court, but also extends to the determination of whether, in the rendition of the judgment or order reviewed, there was illegality or irregularity, by the inferior tribunal, prejudicial to the complaining party.²⁰ It involves a limited re-

Appellate court affirming trial court

(1) Supreme court cannot say on certiorari proceeding, after verdict has been approved by trial judge and affirmed by circuit court, that circuit court affirming judgment arrived at on disputed facts did not proceed in accordance with essential requirements of law.—Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Farris & Co., 149 So. 561, 111 Fla. 412.

(2) Where appellate court affirmed judgment solely on ground that abstract was insufficient, supreme court on certiorari was limited to review of correctness of judgment of appellate court, under Appellate Court Rules, rule 4.—Shumway v. Shumway, 192 N.E. 578, 357 Ill. 477.

Motives of inferior tribunal

Under a statute authorizing the issuance of the writ when the inferior tribunal is alleged to have exceeded its jurisdiction or to have otherwise acted illegally, the court, in inquiring into the action of a board of equalization in ordering the reduction of an assessment, will not review the motives of the board in making such reduction.—Polk County v. Des Moines, 30 N.W. 614, 70 Iowa 351.

In Pennsylvania

Authority of commissioner

The question of law whether the state insurance commissioner may contract for audit of county books without assurance that county will pay therefor, so as to render the county liable for the expense, in view of L.1913 p 545, as to audits, may properly be raised by writ of review directed to the order of the county court disallowing the claim.—Berridge v. Marion County, 159 P. 628, 81 Or. 391.

In personal injury action, under Illinois Pract.Act §§ 121, 122, making judgments of the appellate court final as to the facts in a law action, the supreme court, on certiorari to the appellate court, is limited to a review of questions of law.

the facts are undisputed.²⁵ Error of law, within the meaning of this rule, may include a misapplication of the law, by the inferior court, to the facts as found by it;²⁶ and it has been held that, on certiorari to an appellate court, the supreme court, ordinarily, will not review the ruling of the appellate court in its application of the law to the facts, since it involves a finding of fact,²⁷ and on this theory will not review the court of appeals on the question of the application of the doctrine of error without injury, where the record does not state the facts, as announced infra § 157, but where the facts are determined by the appellate court and set out in its opinion, and affirmatively show a misapplication of the law to the facts, it presents a misconception of the law of the case, an error of law, and it is the duty of the supreme court in its supervisory capacity to review and correct it.²⁸

In New York a statutory order of certiorari, which supersedes the writ of certiorari, brings up for review the jurisdiction and method of procedure and determination of the inferior body on proceedings completed and terminated.²⁹

In South Carolina it has been held that only jurisdictional questions can be reviewed where the writ is issued from the supreme court, but that other than jurisdictional errors may be reviewed where the writ is issued by the court of common pleas.³⁰

In Texas, under Revised Statutes 1925, art 939, on certiorari to the county court, in probate matters, the district court is limited to determining whether the county court committed error,³¹ and relief is granted only when it is made to appear that the proceeding is void, or that some substantial wrong and injustice to the estate has been done.³²

In Wisconsin, where the writ is to review the determination of an inferior court or tribunals, the record can be inspected only to ascertain whether such court acted within its jurisdiction for the reason that other errors may be corrected by writ of error or appeal;³³ but where the writ is issued to a subordinate tribunal exercising quasi-judicial powers in a proceeding of a summary character and from whose determination there is no appeal, the review will extend, not only to whether the subordinate officer or board acted within its jurisdiction, but also to whether or not it acted according to law.³⁴

Where statute merely silent as to appeal

Under a Nonprofit Corporation Law of 1933, vesting exclusive jurisdiction in granting charters in court of common pleas of county where registered office of corporation was to be located, without a provision for appeal, omission of provision for right of appeal could not be ignored and review was limited to review on certiorari to determine whether error at law had been committed.—In re Incorporation of Elkland Leather Workers' Ass'n, 198 A. 13, 330 Pa. 78.

Evidence not set forth in petition

Where defendant's only evidence was in support of a special plea in bar, setting up a discharge in bankruptcy, and where the petition for certiorari did not set forth the evidence, except with reference to the special plea, the question of law involved by the undisputed facts relative thereto as certified by the trial court is the only question which the reviewing court is authorized to pass on.—*Lewis v. c. Rulings on Evidence Rulings on the admissibility or rejection of evidence are, in most states, not reviewable.

In accordance with the rules stated above, § 151 a, b, in most states the review of rulings on the admission or rejection of testimony is not permissible,³⁵ unless such ruling amounts to a patent abuse of discretion.³⁶ In other states, however, such rulings may be reviewed.³⁷

In New York, rulings on the admissibility of evidence have been held not reviewable,³⁸ and it would seem that this is the proper rule, notwithstanding a statutory provision authorizing the court to determine whether "any rule of law affecting the rights of the parties thereto has been violated to the prejudice of the relator."³⁹ Where, however, a review is sought of the rulings of the lower court in admitting or rejecting evidence as to facts which are jurisdictional, it has been held that the court will inquire into the correctness of such rulings.⁴⁰

Burden of proof. The reviewing court will refuse to review rulings made by the inferior tribunal on the burden of proof.⁴¹

d. Rulings on Pleadings

Rulings on pleadings are, generally, not subject to review on certiorari.

The general rule is that the court will not inquire into the correctness of the inferior court's rulings on the pleadings.⁴² However, it has been held that a pleading made the basis of a ruling in an opinion of an appellate court may be considered, by the supreme court, on certiorari to quash the opinion.⁴³

§ 152. Merits of Cause

Unless authorized by constitutional or statutory provision, the court, on certiorari, cannot review the cause on its merits.

Except where the scope of the review under the common-law writ has been enlarged by constitutional or statutory provision,⁴⁴ the court cannot, on re-

Motion to set aside order

Original certiorari is not available to review rulings on motion to vacate and set aside previous order as entered without authority of law.—Holcomb v. Franklin, 235 N.W. 474, 212 Iowa 1159.

Refusal to dismiss

The point urged that no reason appeared in the complaint in the circuit court why the receiver of a corporation, made defendant, would or should not bring the action, does not go to the question of jurisdiction of that court, and therefore may not be considered on certiorari complaining of such court's refusal to dismiss the action.—*Davison v. In reviewing proceedings had on appeal the regularity of the acts of the tribunal before which the cause was instituted ordinarily should not be considered,⁴⁹ irrespective of whether defendant's appearance in the lower court was general or special.⁵⁰ Thus, where a trial on appeal is de novo, the writ brings up for review merely the judgment on the appeal, and not the proceedings of the court from which the appeal was taken.⁵¹ On certiorari to quash the opinion of an appellate court, because of conflict with decisions of the supreme court, the record cannot be reviewed on the merits.⁵²

Same power as on appeal

Under a constitutional provision giving the supreme court the same power to review on certiorari as on appeal, it may, in a mandamus case, take the whole case and render judgment on the merits, even though it decides that mandamus was not plaintiff's proper remedy.—State ex rel Williams v. City of New Orleans, supra.

Whether suspensive appeal should be granted from order granting preliminary injunction is only question that can be decided on certiorari and mandamus to compel granting of such appeal.—Blanchard v. Haber, 112 So. 509, 163 La. 627.

Prejudice to parties' rights

The right, under Remington Code 1915 § 1110, to transfer foreclosure proceedings from the sheriff to the superior court, is unqualified, and a refusal to enjoin the sheriff, where necessary, amounts to a denial of a rule of law, prejudicially affecting relator's rights, within § 1010 subd. 3, providing that one of the questions involving the merits to be determined on a certiorari hearing is "whether in making the determination any rule of law affecting the rights of the parties thereto has been violated."—*State v. Merits of reconventional demand

The question whether there is any merit in reconventional demand pleaded in supplemental answer and whether it was abandoned by filing of original answer without pleading it, are matters to be disposed of by district judge in his final judgment, and not by supreme court on application for writs of certiorari and prohibition to prevent rejection of the amended or supplemental answer.—*Southern Iron & Equipment Co. v. External validity of proceedings

On certiorari to an appellate court, the supreme court is limited to an examination into the external validity of the appellate court's proceedings, and does not extend to the intrinsic correctness of the judgments, where the record presented shows that a cause of action existed, and also shows that the court of original jurisdiction had jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject matter, and that jurisdiction was acquired by the appellate court in accordance with the law.—Florida East Coast Ry. Co. v. George, 107 So. 266, 91 Fla. 72.

Construction of lease

In certiorari to review record of court of appeals for conflict with supreme court decision, supreme court cannot consider question of correct construction of written release by court of appeals, which promulgated rule not in conflict with prior supreme court decision.—State ex rel. Caraker v. Becker, 62 S.W. 2d 899, 333 Mo. 400.

However, on certiorari to an appellate court to review the record presented by writ of error to review a judgment of a lower court, the action of the court of original jurisdiction may be reviewed.⁵³

§ 153. Discretionary Acts

The inferior court's exercise of discretion will not be reviewed, unless the discretion has been abused.

If the inferior court or tribunal did not transcend its authority, acts done by it in the exercise of its discretion are not the subject of review, unless that discretion has been abused,⁵⁴ as where there has been an abuse of discretion which is likely to result in a miscarriage of justice.⁵⁵

§ 154. Validity of Existence of Municipal Boards or Officers

Unless authorized by statute, the validity of the existence of a municipal board or officer will not be reviewed, on a review of the action of such board or officer.

On proceedings to review the action of a municipality or of a public board, unless authorized by statute, the court has no power to inquire into or determine its legal existence.⁵⁶ If, however, it is so empowered, the authority to appoint the board, its own judicial qualification to act as it did, and the manner in which it exercised its functions are open to inquiry.⁵⁷

§ 155. Title to Land

Questions of title to land, arising in the proceeding, ordinarily, cannot be reviewed.

Questions of title to land which may have arisen in the proceeding cannot ordinarily be tried.⁵⁸

§ 156. Constitutionality of Statute

The constitutionality of a statute may be reviewed where it is properly in issue; but, ordinarily, will not be reviewed if the question is not jurisdictional.

The constitutionality of a statute, affecting the rights of a party, and properly raised as an issue in the case may be reviewed on certiorari.⁵⁹ However, it is generally otherwise where the question is not jurisdictional,⁶⁰ especially where the facts do not bring the case within the statute,⁶¹ or where the ground of attack on the constitutionality of the statute is not argued in the prosecutor's brief.⁶² Where the review is limited by statute to the reg-

Docket as record

Certiorari would not lie to have alleged alteration in judgment set aside, although return showed that "copy of Envelope" contained notation that judgment was for prosecutor, and post card from clerk of court stated that judgment would be entered for prosecutor, where docket showed no entry of judgment for prosecutor, where docket is, by statute, court's record.—*Continental Adjustment Corporation v. Depositions Statute authorizes order to take depositions on certiorari to review order of public utility commissioners.—Eastern New Jersey Power Co. v. Board of Public Utility Com'rs, 140 A. 258, 6 N.J.Misc. 118.

Statute permitting oral proof in some local practice, where the inferior court fails or is unable to respond to a rule to certify the facts or proceedings, the testimony or affidavits of witnesses may be resorted to.⁷³ So, also, the reviewing court will not hear depositions, although they were taken to be used in the lower court, since they form no part of the record,⁷⁴ particularly where they were filed after the order or judgment complained of was entered.⁷⁵

Record or opinion in appellate court. A review on certiorari of the decision of an appellate court has been held to be, not of the record or judgment therein, but of the opinion of that court on questions which it shows, considers, and passes on;⁷⁶

and, where the appellate court has applied the doctrine of error without injury, its decision will be reviewed only where the opinion contains a full statement of the facts;⁷⁷ but, where the facts are undisputed, the reviewing court may examine the record for a more complete understanding of the features treated.⁷⁸

On certiorari to quash the opinion of an appellate court, as being in conflict with a previous decision of the supreme court, the latter court, in determining the conflict, is limited to a review of the facts and issues as they appear in the opinion of the appellate court,⁷⁹ or in any pleading, instruction, written instrument, or other part of the record re-

Answer

Where the opinion refers to the answer in the case and makes it a part of the basis for its ruling, the supreme court may consider the answer as fully set forth in the opinion, and may examine the record to ascertain the contents of the answer.—State ex rel. Talbott v. Shain, 66 S.W.2d 826, 334 Mo. 617—State ex rel. National Council of Knights and Ladies of Security v. Trimble, 239 S.W. 467, 292 Mo. 371.

Contract

Reference in the opinion to a contract makes such contract as much a part of the opinion as if fully written out therein for the purpose of review.—State ex rel. Western Automobile Ins. Co. v. Trimble, 249 S.W. 902, 297 Mo. 659—State ex rel. Studebaker Corporation of America v. Trimble, 247 S.W. 119, 295 Mo. 667.

Correlative facts on which the court of appeals based its ruling can be referred to only as aids in more clearly understanding the court's decision.—Ford v. Ellison, 230 S.W. 637, 287 Mo. 683.

Instructions not referred to

(1) Instructions not set out, discussed, or referred to in the opinion cannot be considered by the supreme court.—State ex rel. Locke v. Trimble, Mo., 298 S.W. 782—State ex rel.

City of St. Joseph v. Ellison, Mo., 223 S.W. 671, quashing certiorari Bradford v. City of St. Joseph, App., 214 S.W. 281.

(2) Instruction not referred to cannot be considered by supreme court, although relator claimed instruction had been condemned by supreme court in prior decision and, on appeal to court of appeals, had allegedly assigned instruction as error.—State ex rel. St. Louis Public Service Co. v. Becker, 66 S.W.2d 141, 334 Mo. 115, quashing certiorari Berryman v. People's Motorbus Co. of St. Louis, 54 S.W.2d 747, 228 Mo.App. 1032.

(3) Proposition that instruction undertaking to cover whole case must cover defenses as well as plaintiff's theory is not before supreme court on certiorari to quash opinion of court of appeals which contains no discussion of instruction from that standpoint.—State ex rel. Major v. Judges of St. Louis Court of Appeals, 276 S.W. 1026, 310 Mo. 386, quashing certiorari Major v. Host, App., 263 S.W. 466.

(4) Instructions referred to, but not specifically pointed out, and not complained of by relator, cannot be examined.—State ex rel. Horspool v. Haid, 40 S.W.2d 611, 328 Mo. 327, conformed to Forsythe v. Horspool, App., 49 S.W.2d 687, and quashed State ex rel. Horspool v. Haid, 65 S.W.2d 923, 334 Mo. 196.

Letter made basis of ruling may be considered by supreme court as if fully set forth in former court's opinion on certiorari to quash such opinion as conflicting with supreme court's prior decisions.—State ex rel. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of Baltimore v. Shain, 98 S.W.2d 690, 339 Mo. 621, conformed to King v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of Baltimore, App., 105 S.W.2d 994.

Petition and counter-affidavits

Allegations in a verified petition for certiorari to review the entry nunc pro tunc of an order amending an order granting a new trial, and the counter-affidavits of the judge to the true order originally made by the court, cannot be considered where the record stated that the order as originally entered was not correct, and the amendment was made so that the entry would conform to the true order.—Halpern v. Superior Court in and for Alameda County, 212 P. 916, 190 Cal. 384.

Unverified suggestions

Ruling and record of appellate court on petition for certiorari cannot be brought to attention of supreme court by unverified suggestions in opposition to petition for

in regard to irrelevant matter in the petition.⁸⁵ It has been held that allegations in the petition are not to be taken as true as part of the record, on the hearing, unless verified by the answer or by the record sent up in connection therewith,⁸⁶ and that allegations in a petition, denied by the answer, which is not traversed, present nothing for consideration on review.⁸⁷ Where, however, the allegations of the petition are admitted to be true, and the only question before the lower appellate court was whether the facts alleged warranted the judgment, the case may be reviewed, although it was tried de novo in the appellate court and the evidence was not reduced to writing.⁸⁸

Transcript attached to petition. A transcript of, or extracts from, the record of the inferior tribunal attached to, or contained in, the petition or affidavit for the writ will not be considered.⁸⁹ It has been held, however, that the reviewing court may look to a bill of exceptions accompanying the petition for certiorari to review a decree, not stating the substance of the evidence.⁹⁰

In New York it is expressly provided by statute that the hearing must be, except as otherwise provided, on the writ and return, "and the papers upon which the writ was granted." Under this statute, if the return to the writ meets all the allegations of the writ and of such papers and traverses them, the hearing must be confined to the return.⁹¹ If, however, the return to the writ admits the facts stated in the writ, or the papers, on which the writ was granted, or is silent as to them, such facts become important and must be considered on the hearing,⁹² not to impeach or contradict the return,⁹³ but to establish facts as to which the return is silent.⁹⁴ In other words, allegations in the petition which are admitted or not controverted by the return are to be accepted as true.⁹⁵ Moreover, if the denials in the return consist of conclusions of law, the court will consider the petition as well as the return.⁹⁶ Such a statute will not authorize the consideration of additional affidavits.⁹⁷

§ 159. — Matters Not Regularly Appearing of Record

Matters which do not regularly appear of record, and of which a record is not required, may be shown by proof aliunde.

It is permissible to show aliunde the record matters which do not regularly appear therein, and of which the inferior tribunal is not required to keep a record,⁹⁸ although it has been held that such proof can be taken only on motion therefor.⁹⁹ Where the writ is allowed ex parte, on the return thereto, such matters, other than those properly inquirable into by the writ, may be shown to the court, as would, if shown in the first instance, have induced the court to refuse the writ.¹

Effect of stipulation

A stipulation that the answer, when not in conflict with the petition, shall be taken as true, and the petition, when not in conflict with the answer, shall be taken as true, cannot be acted on by the reviewing court, since this involves a comparison of two different statements, and tends to create confusion and conflict.—Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Potter, 47 S.E. 924, 120 Ga. 343.

the record, in determining the nature of the action, pleadings, defenses, and the like.

Under some circumstances, as where the jurisdiction or scope of relief is doubtful, it has been held that the court may hear proof of facts not disclosed by the record, to show the nature of the action, the pleadings, defense, or the like.² In determining the scope of a bill and the relief thereunder, the court may consider the pleadings and proceedings in an earlier suit, the nature of which is disclosed in the opinion and decree in that suit and pleaded in the later suit.³

§ 161. — Principles on Which Inferior Tribunal Acted

The principles on which the inferior tribunal proceeded may be determined from matters dehors the record.

An exception to the rule that matters dehors the record are not receivable has been recognized by hearing evidence to show the principles on which the inferior tribunal proceeded.⁴

§ 162. — Jurisdictional Facts

Matters dehors the record cannot be considered, by the reviewing court, to supply jurisdictional facts as to the inferior tribunal; but such matters may be considered to show want of jurisdiction, not apparent from the record, or to protect the reviewing court's own jurisdiction.

Want of jurisdiction, apparent on the face of the record, may be noticed by the reviewing court on its own motion;⁵ and, if it arises from matters not appearing in any way on the proceedings, it may be shown aliunde.⁶ Jurisdictional facts, however, must generally be determined from the face of the return,⁷ and, if they do not appear from the return, they cannot be supplied aliunde,⁸ unless it is otherwise provided by statute.⁹ So, when jurisdictional facts do not appear from the record, they cannot be supplied by assertions made in the return.¹⁰

In determining the sufficiency of a complaint to give jurisdiction, the greatest liberality of construction will be indulged; and, if it states facts giving such jurisdiction, it will be held sufficient notwithstanding other irrelevant or immaterial facts are stated or the law violated is inaccurately cited.¹¹

In New York the statute authorizes the court to permit either party to produce affidavits or other written proof relating to any alleged error of fact, or any other question of fact essential to the jurisdiction of the body or officer to make the determination to be reviewed; but the statute limits the right to present affidavits or other proof to a fact which affects the jurisdiction of the body or officer whose action is sought to be reviewed.¹² Such a statute is inapplicable where the return states the facts.¹³

Jurisdiction of reviewing court. The reviewing court, although it must try the case on the record presented to the lower court, may consider matters transpiring after the cause is heard in the lower court, to protect its jurisdiction and prevent its being trifled with or rendered ineffectual.¹⁴

§ 163. — Fraud, Partiality, Etc.

Evidence dehors the record may be heard to show fraud, partiality, corruption, or extortion.

It has been held that evidence dehors the record is permissible to show fraud, partiality, corruption, or extortion.¹⁵ To prevent injustice, depositions are admissible to show that the record is false.¹⁶

§ 164. — Matters Improperly Returned

Matters returned which do not properly constitute a part of the record should be disregarded.

Where the inferior tribunal returns matters which do not properly constitute a part of the record and which, therefore, ought not to have been incorporated in the return, such surplusage will be disregarded, and cannot be considered.¹⁷ The reviewing court will disregard, for example, matters which have been voluntarily incorporated in the return without any order to return them;¹⁸ but, where the command is vague, if the writ expresses the desire of the court to be informed of the matter returned, such matter may be considered, although not specifically commanded.¹⁹ The reviewing court also will not look to affidavits and other papers attached to the return which do not properly constitute a part of the record,²⁰ fragmentary papers accompanying the return which are not properly authenticated or certified,²¹ or matters contained in an unofficial or unauthorized return.²²

Facts contained in an additional return erroneously compelled;²³ a new record, or new matter, voluntarily attached by the inferior court to the return previously made;²⁴ statements in the return as to proceedings had in a case other than that under review;²⁵ matters returned as derived from the statement of others,²⁶ or which are based on recollection, and not alleged as facts,²⁷ cannot be considered by the reviewing court.

The opinion of the lower court, where not a proper part of the return, cannot be considered;²⁹ but, where, in a summary proceeding, a review on the merits is not permissible, and a mere inspection of the docket shows nothing, the reviewing court may look to the opinion, as well as the action of the court, to see whether it exceeded its jurisdiction or its proper legal discretion.³⁰

§ 165. Conclusiveness and Effect of Return or Record

Facts found below and returned are, ordinarily, to be taken as true and conclusive, and cannot be contradicted by evidence dehors the record.

In the absence of objection to the sufficiency of the return, as a general rule, matters of fact, within the jurisdiction of the inferior tribunal, which are found in such tribunal and returned, are to be taken as true and conclusive, in the reviewing court and, in the absence of statutory authority therefor, cannot be contradicted by evidence dehors the record;³¹ neither can such evidence be considered to supplement the record;³² nor can an issue of fact be made up in the revisory court to supply omissions in the record or to control its recitals.³³ The general rule applies although the return is not in accord with the facts, and regardless of good faith.³⁴ Where the writ directs that all things touching and concerning a judgment shall be certified, and the return states that all have been certified, if anything else is needed, it should be brought up by proper proceedings for that purpose.³⁵

In accordance with the general rule, if the statements in the application for the writ conflict with the return, the latter governs.³⁶ The return cannot be contradicted by the affidavit of a third person³⁷ or of the petitioner;³⁸ nor can it be impeached or qualified except by an amended return certified by the court below.³⁹ A respondent judge cannot complain that the reviewing court accepts the record below which respondent has certified as a part of his return.⁴⁰ The deposition of a single judge is insufficient to contradict the recitals of an order made by the whole court;⁴¹ and likewise a return by a majority of a board cannot be contradicted by a separate return of a minority of the board.⁴²

However, allegations in the return, which are mere conclusions, are not binding.⁴³ The return, also, is not necessarily conclusive as to statements that do not go to the merits, but are made merely by way of excuse for delay.⁴⁴ Moreover, the opinion of the lower court, where contradicted by other portions of the record, is not conclusive.⁴⁵

Certificate of clerk. The record cannot be contradicted by the certificate of the clerk of the court;⁴⁶ but where the clerk of the trial court certifies on the return that certain pages of the transcript are not a part of the record, and there is nothing in the record tending to contradict the certificate, it will be taken as correct.⁴⁷

Contradiction by predecessor in office. A return by the legal custodian of the record cannot be contradicted by his predecessor in office who entertained the proceedings;⁴⁸ nor is the conclusiveness of such a return affected by the fact that it impeaches the decision of the former official.⁴⁹

Want of authority to make return. Where no claim is made that a return of a public board signed by its president is unauthorized, or was not made by the direction of a majority of the board, evidence aliunde will not be received to show that the return was not in fact the return of the board.⁵⁰

Effect of statutes. Although the rule as to the conclusiveness of the return may be changed by statute, and in some states has been, to some extent so changed, it would seem that the court will not consider matters dehors the record, unless authority so to do is conferred in unmistakable terms. Thus, it has been held that a statute authorizing the court to proceed and to give judgment in the cause, as the right of the matter may appear, without regarding technical or formal omissions or defects in the proceedings, does not confer on the court the power to consider extraneous evidence; and a statute providing that the records of the inferior tribunal shall be conclusive as far as the same extend does not deprive the record, as returned of its conclusiveness.⁵¹

§ 166. — As to Jurisdiction of Inferior Tribunal

A return showing jurisdiction of the inferior court is conclusive on that question.

Where the return shows that the inferior tribunal has jurisdiction the same is conclusive, and an assignment of want of jurisdiction is not permissible.⁵²

§ 167. — Statements in Return Dehors the Record

The record, ordinarily, cannot be contradicted or controlled by statements in the return.

It is a settled rule that the record cannot be controlled or contradicted in any particular by statements in the return, even when it is sought to support the regularity of the proceedings;⁵³ and if such statements are in conflict with the record they must be disregarded.⁵⁴ A statement in the return as to matters of fact is not conclusive, where the return includes as a part thereof all of the testimony and proceedings before commissioners, which show that the statement is not supported by any evidence.⁵⁵ If, however, statements made in the return as to matters which do not regularly appear of record are proper, such assertions are taken as true.⁵⁶

§ 168. — Traverse of Return under Authority of Statute

A return or answer which is not traversed or excepted to, as authorized by statute, is conclusive and true as to allegations thereof.

As to truth of allegations of petition

Where the answer stated that all the allegations of the petition were not true without specifying those that were untrue and did not verify the allegation that the damage sued for was to growing crops, the contention that the magistrate was without jurisdiction was not sustained.—Evans v. Williams, 106 S.E. 321, 26 Ga.App. 412.

Disqualification of trial judge

Where petition for certiorari alleged that trial judge was disqualified to preside because he had been of counsel in obtaining judgment in pursuance of which execution had been issued and levy made, to which levy, affidavit of illegality had been filed by defendant in execution, trial judge's answer stating that he had taken judgment on note merely as favor to plaintiff's counsel, which answer was not traversed or objected to, was conclusive on question of disqualification.—Beavers v. Cassells, 192 S.E. 249, 56 Ga.App. 146, affirmed, Sup., 196 S.E. 716.

Error in admitting evidence

Where answer to certiorari setting out evidence, but showing no ruling

Under some statutes, the return or answer may be traversed, or matters not contained in it may be supplied, as announced supra § 131; but if it is not traversed or excepted to, as so authorized, it is conclusive as to the allegations thereof, and the reviewing court is bound to accept it as true.⁵⁷

§ 169. — References

The reviewing court, in a proper case, may appoint a referee to ascertain the truth of the facts stated in the return, or to take evidence and make findings.

The court, in the absence of statutory authority, will not order a reference for the purpose of ascertaining the truth of matters of fact stated in the return, unless under peculiar circumstances, and for strong reasons, it deems it advisable so to do;⁵⁸ but when authorized by statute so to do, the court may appoint a referee to take evidence and to make findings of facts,⁵⁹ and in such case the common-law doctrine that the return is conclusive is abrogated.⁶⁰ If the relator refuses to testify on the reference, the case may be sent back to the referee to give the relator an opportunity to purge himself of contempt.⁶¹ on its admissibility, was not traversed or excepted to, allegations of error in admitting evidence over objection cannot be considered.—Howard v. Holland, 114 S.E. 549, 29 Ga. App. 186.

Refusal to dismiss case

Where answer stating that no motion to dismiss was made, was not traversed, assignments of error complaining of the alleged refusal to dismiss the case could not be considered.—Axson v. Seals, 114 S.E. 719, 29 Ga.App. 142.

59. N.Y.—People v. Smith, 24 Hun 66, affirmed 85 N.Y. 628—People v. Zaller, 15 N.Y.S. 684.

Conclusiveness of report

Where, on certiorari to review the action of the board of supervisors in auditing the relator's claim, the relator moves for a further return, the fact that the board by resolution consent to the appointment of a referee to take testimony and report on such claim by the special term, and that the referee's finding is approved by the supreme court, is not a submission of the question of arbitration, and hence the report of the referee is not conclusive on the board.—People ex rel. Martin v. Westchester County, 65 N.Y.S. 707, 53 App.Div. 339.

60. N.Y.—People v. Smith, 24 Hun 66, affirmed 85 N.Y. 628.

§ 170. Mode of Trial, and Trial De Novo

A trial de novo may be had only where, and to the extent that, it is authorized by statute.

In the absence of statutory authority therefor, a case on certiorari cannot be tried de novo in the reviewing court;⁶² nor is there a right to trial by jury.⁶³

Under some statutes, however, either by express provision of the statute, or by virtue of the fact that the scope of the review is enlarged to be as on appeal, the reviewing court on certiorari, may try the case de novo;⁶⁴ and under some statutes such a trial may be had in all cases of certiorari,⁶⁵ but under others it may be had only where the writ is used as a substitute for an appeal.⁶⁶

On such trial de novo the procedure is the same as in cases tried de novo on appeals.⁶⁷ The case must be tried on its merits, without reference to errors in procedure in the lower court;⁶⁸ questions as to what evidence was heard by the lower court and as to effect of its order are immaterial,⁶⁹ and the judgment below is no evidence of any fact on the new trial;⁷⁰ but the reviewing court must confine its inquiry to the grounds of attack stated in the application for the writ.⁷¹

Burden of proof. On certiorari, the burden is on the moving party to prove the merits of his cause by a preponderance of the evidence,⁷² and to show plainly, distinctly, and affirmatively the irregularity or error alleged.⁷³ On certiorari to quash the opinion of an appellate court as being in conflict with a previous decision of the supreme court, the burden is on the relator to point out the previous decisions of the supreme court which he claims are contravened or impugned by the opinion of the appellate court.⁷⁴

§ 171. Presumptions

The reviewing court may indulge all natural presumptions and proper conclusions arising from the record, and make every lawful intendment in favor of the determination and the regularity of the proceedings below.

Assumption of fact

Where the court of appeals, in an opinion under review, assumed that defendant was a fraternal benefit association without making an express finding to that effect, the supreme court can adopt the same assumption.—State ex rel. National Council of Knights and Ladies of Security v. Trimble, 239 S.W. 467, 292 Mo. 371.

Existence of ordinance

On certiorari to review resolution abolishing office of borough recorder appointed by resolution, it cannot be assumed in absence of proof that there is an ordinance providing for recorder's appointment or defining his duties.—Grippio v. Mayor and Council of Kenilworth, 171 A. 494, 12 N.J.Misc. 335.

76. Mo.—State v. Ellison, 182 S.W. 996, 266 Mo. 604.

11 C.J. p 208 note 9.

All material evidence contained in answer

Where application for writ does not state all material evidence on point as to which evidence is claimed to be insufficient to warrant conclusion, as required by Supreme Court Rules, rule 28 subd 4, and petitioner files no reply to answer purporting to supply much omitted evidence, Supreme Court may assume that all material evidence on such point is contained in answer.—City of San Bernardino v. Industrial Accident Commission, 227 P. 924, 67 Cal.App. 612.

Facts on issue

Where the inferior court did not state conclusion, but undertook to state facts themselves, presumption prevailed that facts stated were all facts on issue.—State ex rel. Ward v. Trimble, 39 S.W.2d 372, 327 Mo. 773, quashing opinion Ward v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 22 S.W.2d 81, 224 Mo.App. 16, affirmed 46 S.W. 2d 268, 226 Mo.App. 752.

On certiorari to quash opinion of court of appeals, the supreme court must assume opinion correctly states nature of case, contents of petition, and relief sought.—State ex rel. Kilkenny v. Daues, Mo., 289 S.W. 550, quashing certiorari Kilkenny v. Kilkenny, 279 S.W. 184, 220 Mo.App. 535.

Official decision of mayor

On certiorari to review mayor's revocation of license, presumption is that official decision is correct.—State v. City of Milwaukee, 240 N.W. 847, 207 Wis. 199, 79 A.L.R. 281.

Refusal to direct verdict

In passing upon the action of trial judge in refusing to grant directed verdict for plaintiff, court must take that view of the evidence most favorable to the denial.—Kerr v. Raines, 256 S.W. 246, 148 Tenn. 501.

Removal of default

The reviewing court must presume that the lower court removed a default only upon a showing of a sufficient legal cause therefor.—Dimond v. Marwell, R.I., 190 A. 683.

As to motion being kept alive

Where motion for new trial was granted more than twenty days after entry of judgment, silent acquiescence of plaintiff in such an order and subsequent stipulations by plaintiff with adversary party that case be tried on a day certain would authorize the assumption in the supreme court that the motion for a new trial was kept alive by stipulation or court order, motion for new trial having been made before the expiration of the twenty days.—Miller v. Superior Court of Mohave County, 185 P. 357, 21 Ariz. 61.

As to regularity and sufficiency of instructions

Where answer of trial judge set up that requested charge was covered by general charge, superior court, and appellate court on bill of exceptions from its judgment, must assume that requested charge was sufficiently covered by other instructions.—J. J. Bull & Son v. Carpenter, 124 S.E. 381, 32 Ga.App. 637.

Presentation of issue

(1) Where appellate court's opinion reviewed for conflict in decisions did not state pleadings or issues, it will be presumed that contested issue was properly presented.—State ex rel. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. v. Trimble, 20 S.W.2d 46, 323 Mo. 458, denying quashal of opinion and judgment Luthy v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. of Milwaukee, Wis., 20 S.W. 2d 299, 224 Mo.App. 371.

(2) The supreme court, in reviewing opinion of court of appeals, will assume, in absence of contrary showing, that trial court, in submitting issues of negligence to jury, submitted them as specifically as they are alleged in the petition.—State ex rel. Lehrack v. Trimble, 274 S.W. 416, 308 Mo. 597.

Service of petition

Filing of answer to petition for certiorari by former magistrate raised presumption that service of petition had been duly effected, and dispensed with necessity for legal proof thereof.—Love v. Bush, '94 S. E. 626, 21 Ga.App. 436.

ties;⁸¹ and uncertainties or ambiguities in the answer or return will be construed, if reasonably possible, to sustain the verdict and judgment.⁸² Such presumption of regularity in the proceedings under the review is not confined to proceedings of courts, but is also indulged in favor of the action of municipal bodies.⁸³ It will also be presumed that evidence, if not returned, was adduced and was competent, relevant, and sufficient to warrant the determination made.⁸⁴

Presumption as to jurisdiction. Where the record is silent as to jurisdictional facts, the judgment of a court of general jurisdiction will be upheld by a presumption that the facts existed, until the contrary is shown by an exhibition of the whole record,⁸⁵ and that the court proceeded within its jurisdiction.⁸⁶ It is otherwise, however, as to inferior courts and boards.⁸⁷

Interest of petitioner. After the allowance of a writ the status of a prosecutor as interested in the matter will be presumed in the absence of proof to the contrary.⁸⁸

§ 172. Questions of Fact

- a. In general
- b. Weight and sufficiency of evidence
- c. Examination of evidence to determine jurisdiction

a. In General

As a general rule, questions or findings of fact in the lower court are not reviewable on certiorari, although such review may be permitted by statute or local practice.

The general rule is that, in the absence of statute or local practice otherwise, questions or findings of fact, in the inferior tribunal, are not reviewable on certiorari,⁸⁹ and that evidence which is made a part of the record cannot be examined to determine

That objection was sufficiently and timely made

On certiorari to quash opinion of court of appeals, supreme court must presume, in absence of anything in such opinion to contrary, that particular contention was sufficiently and timely made before court of appeals.—State ex rel. Missouri Mut. Ass'n v. Allen, 78 S.W.2d 862, 336 Mo. 352, quashing, App., 60 S.W.2d 402.

81. Ariz.—Miller v. Superior Court of Mohave County, 185 P. 357, 21 Ariz. 61.

Silent acquiescence of plaintiff in an order, made more than twenty days after entry of judgment, granting defendant's motion for a new trial, and stipulation by plaintiff with adversary party setting a day certain for trial, would authorize the supreme court on appeal to assume that plaintiff was willing to waive, and did waive, error of court in granting such a motion after twenty days without time being extended.—Miller v. Superior Court of Mohave County, supra.

Legality of meeting

On certiorari to review record of board of health, presumption exists under record, in the absence of evidence to contrary, that board meeting was legally convened.—State ex rel. Ball v. State Board of Health, 26 S.W.2d 773, 325 Mo. 41—State ex rel. Johnson v. Clark, 232 S.W. 1031, 288 Mo. 659.

the finding or decision has been concurred in by the trial court and an intermediate appellate court,⁹³ or where it is against a party who does not bring certiorari.⁹⁴

ing, and material injury resulted to the petitioner therefrom.⁹⁸ Findings of fact may be considered, however, so far as they concern fundamental questions,⁹⁹ such as whether they were sufficient to sustain the lower court's action.¹

Under the local practice, in some states, on certiorari to an appellate court, the supreme court will accept the findings or conclusions of fact made by the appellate court, from the evidence stated in its opinion, and will not review disputed questions or conclusions of fact,² or the application of the

As based on evidence

Supreme court will not review court of appeals on its finding of facts, either as to tendencies of evidence or upon effect of evidence in considering giving or refusing of affirmative charge by trial court, or weight of evidence on review of ruling on motion for new trial.—Mobile Pure Milk Co. v. Coleman, 161 So. 829, 230 Ala. 432, denying certiorari 161 So. 826, 26 Ala.App. 402.

As question for jury

The court of appeal's determination that a question of fact was for the jury under the evidence, and that the trial court did not err in refusing the general affirmative charge for defendant on such question, is not reviewable by the supreme court on certiorari.—Ex parte Sovereign Camp, W. O. W., 87 So. 620, 205 Ala. 316, denying certiorari Sovereign Camp W. O. W. v. Dennis, 87 So. 616, 17 Ala.App. 642.

"Facts of the case," with which supreme court will deal in case brought from court of appeal by writ of review, are facts that were proved or admitted, not deductions or conclusions as to duty of parties, or negligence.—Llorens v. McCann, 175 So. 442, 187 La. 642, reversing, App., 171 So. 481.

Inferences from facts

(1) On certiorari supreme court will not review court of appeals with respect to its inferences from proved facts, unless those facts raise presumption of law, which is not given that effect by that court.—Reichert Milling Co. v. George, 162 So. 402, 230 Ala. 589, denying certiorari 162 So. 383, 26 Ala.App. 417, conforming to 162 So. 393, 230 Ala. 3.

(2) The fact that the court of appeals, in affirming the judgment of the trial court, required a remittitur is not a concession that the verdict was the result of passion and prejudice.—State ex rel. Blando v. Haid, Mo., 60 S.W.2d 38, quashing certiorari Vitale v. Blando, App., 52 S.W. 2d 24.

Litigant's only remedy to correct fact findings which are against the weight of the evidence or which do not sufficiently state the facts is a resort to the court of appeals for a correction of its findings.—Payne v. Boutwell, 164 So. 755, 231 Ala. 311, denying certiorari 164 So. 753, 26 Ala.App. 573.

Rebuttal of presumption

Finding of court of appeals that evidence was sufficient to rebut presumption of negligence of manufacturer of sack of flour bought for ultimate consumer is conclusive on certiorari, since finding was a conclusion of fact from evidence and not assertion of a legal principle or its application to facts.—Reichert Milling Co. v. George, 162 So. 402, 230 Ala. 589, denying certiorari 162 So. 383, 26 Ala.App. 417, conforming to 162 So. 393, 230 Ala. 3.

clusion reached by applying the law to the facts, where it had reached a different conclusion in applying the law to a similar state of facts.⁶

Findings based on personal knowledge and inspection. The rule that the findings of fact will not be reviewed applies with peculiar force where the findings are based, either in whole or in part, on personal knowledge and inspection.⁷

As authorized by constitutional or statutory provision. In some states, by virtue of constitutional or statutory provisions, the reviewing court may review the evidence and inquire into matters of fact.⁸ Such statutes either are applicable to certiorari in general or are special in their application and provide that the powers of the court as to the extent of the review shall be enlarged when the writ is sued out from or to certain courts or in special designated cases,⁹ such as in equity cases.¹⁰ The usual purport of such statutes is that the court shall, without regarding technical omissions, imperfections, or defects which did not affect the merits, determine disputed questions of fact as well as of law, or that the court shall inquire whether there was any competent proof of all the facts necessary to be proved, and dispose of the case as law and justice may require.¹¹ Furthermore, as has been held, where a finding of fact is simply a deduction from other facts reported for review, and the ultimate fact in question is purely the result of reasoning, the reviewing court may judge of its correctness and draw its own conclusions from the facts reported.¹² It has been held, however, that a statute authorizing the court to enter such judgment as the court below should have rendered, or to make such order, judgment, or decree as law and justice require, does not enlarge the authority of the court so as to enable it to review the evidence.¹³

b. Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence

- (1) General rule
- (2) Limitation of rule

(1) General Rule

As a general rule, the weight and sufficiency of the evidence as to the facts on which the lower court's decision or finding was based, will not be reviewed.

Where no jurisdictional fact is in dispute, the review on certiorari, as a general rule, does not extend to the consideration of the probative force of conflicting testimony, and, therefore, where there is some evidence, the weight and sufficiency thereof as to the facts on which the determination below was based, ordinarily, will not be considered.¹⁴ In any event the weight and sufficiency of the evi-

Under a constitutional provision giving the supreme court, on certiorari, the same power and authority to review a decision of the court of appeals as if the case had been carried to the supreme court directly by appeal, the supreme court, once the writ of review is granted and the case is brought up, has the same jurisdiction to determine as to its facts, as well as the law applicable thereto, as it would were the case directly appealable.—Davenport v. Adler, 26 So. 836, 52 La. Ann. 263.

In Tennessee

(1) Under a statute making the findings of the chancellor and court of appeals, to the extent that they concur, conclusive, if there is evidence to support them, on the supreme court, a review of facts in a case presented to the supreme court on certiorari is only permissible to extent that findings of the chancellor and court of appeals are contradictory.—Cooley v. East & West Ins. Co., 61 S.W.2d 656, 166 Tenn. 405—Miller v. Kendrick, 285 S.W. 51, 153 Tenn. 596.

(2) Where the chancellor's finding is not appealed from, nor concurrent finding made by court of appeals, supreme court need not read evidence to determine facts relied on.—Edington v. Kreis-Keener Shoe Co., 283 S.W. 987, 153 Tenn. 323.

In Washington, under Remington Rev.St. § 391, the supreme court will pass on a question of fact, in an action for equitable relief, only where the evidence is brought up by a statement of facts, and not by a bill of exceptions.—State ex rel. Northeast Transp. Co. v. Superior Court of King County, Wash., 77 P.2d 1012.

dence will not be reviewed where the reviewing court orders a new trial on another ground.¹⁵

Credibility of witnesses. In accordance with the general rule against a review of the weight and sufficiency of the evidence, the reviewing court, ordinarily, will not inquire into the credibility of the witnesses.¹⁶ It has been held, however, that the court in passing on certiorari, where questions of fact are involved and the evidence is conflicting, may, in its discretion pass on the credibility of the witnesses.¹⁷

(2) Limitation of Rule

The evidence may be reviewed, in some states, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the lower court's finding is supported by any evidence, or whether it is clearly against the weight of the evidence.

Ruling or finding on weight of evidence

In some states, however, either by statute or the established local practice, a review of the evidence is permissible for the purpose of determining whether the finding or decision of the inferior tribunal is supported by any competent evidence or whether it is so clearly against the weight of the evidence that it would not be permitted to stand if it were the verdict of a jury,¹⁸ a review of the evidence, in such cases, being permitted on the theory, where not affected by statute, that the error or question is one of law.¹⁹ The weight and sufficiency of the evidence may also be reviewed where there is no competent evidence on which the finding or decision is based;²⁰ or where, if there is evidence, it is so inherently improbable as to constitute no evidence at all;²¹ or where there is only evidence illegally admitted, and the conclusions of the judge are founded on such illegal evidence;²² or where the finding clearly indicates that the evidence was not duly considered, or an erroneous rule of law was applied to the evidence;²³ or where the weight of the evidence is the sole ground on which the review is rested.²⁴

In Georgia, the superior court has original discretion, where questions of fact are involved and the evidence is conflicting, in reviewing the evidence.²⁵

In New York, while earlier cases supported the general rule that the weight or sufficiency of the

Under moratorium act

The scope of review on certiorari under a Moratorium Act, providing for a speedy review, to prevent a miscarriage of justice, is more comprehensive than in ordinary cases, and supreme court, under such statute, will determine whether there is any substantial competent evidence to sustain trial court's findings.—Peterson v. Points, N.D., 275 N.W. 867.

Withdrawing case from jury

An assignment that the chancellor erred in withdrawing case from jury at close of all the evidence presents the same question presented by assignment, on appeal in error in action at law, that trial court erred in sustaining motion for directed verdict, which presents question of law and not question of fact, and hence, on certiorari, supreme court examines all evidence in record to determine whether court of appeals properly decided such question of law.—Lincoln County Bank v. Mad-dox, Tenn.App., 114 S.W.2d 821.

In Michigan

The court will review the evidence only to ascertain and determine whether a total absence of testimony on a material fact leaves the findings or verdict destitute of evidential support, and not to see whether the findings or verdict are against the great weight of the evidence.—People v. evidence is not reviewable,²⁶ under the express provisions of the Civil Practice Act § 1304, the rule now is that the sufficiency of the evidence is reviewable;²⁷ but the only question to be determined, if there is any competent proof of the facts necessary to be proved, is whether there is such a preponderance of proof against the facts found that a verdict affirming the existence of such facts would be set aside by the court as against the weight of the evidence.²⁸

As an exception to the general rule that the sufficiency of the evidence will not be reviewed, the sufficiency of the evidence may be inquired into in determining whether jurisdictional facts were or were not proved, or whether the lower tribunal had exceeded its jurisdiction.³⁰ This exception arises out of the most important office and function of the writ—the keeping of inferior courts and tribunals within proper bounds. If the decision of the inferior tribunals as to the sufficiency of the evidence to establish jurisdictional facts was not reviewable, certiorari would be of no avail as a remedy against an assumption of jurisdiction. For the purpose of enabling the reviewing court to determine whether jurisdictional facts were established, it may require a return to be made of the evidence on which such facts are based.³¹ Where, however, the question of jurisdiction is determined by an inferior tribunal board, or officer whose jurisdiction

Sole purpose of review

On certiorari, the evidence adduced on the hearing before an inferior board or tribunal of limited jurisdiction may be brought up to the reviewing court for the sole purpose of determining whether the finding of a jurisdictional fact by such board or tribunal is sustainable by the evidence, and if there be no evidence to sustain such decision, it must be annulled.—Garvin v. Chambers, 232 P. 696, 195 Cal. 212.

In absence of evidence to support lower court's fact findings giving lower court jurisdiction, lower court has no jurisdiction to decide issue.—Crocher v. Abel, 180 N.E. 852, 348 Ill. 269.

of a proceeding is challenged on evidence aliunde the record, and on evidence justifying a conclusion for or against such jurisdiction, the court entertaining the proceedings on writ of review cannot interfere with the conclusion reached, it being the result of the exercise of a necessary discretion vested in all tribunals, boards, and officers exercising judicial functions;³² but where the evidence before the inferior tribunal does not establish jurisdictional facts, a finding of such facts does not preclude an inquiry by the reviewing court as to whether the finding is supported by the evidence.³³

§ 173. Harmless Error

Harmless errors may be disregarded on review.

Mere technical irregularities or formal errors not affecting the merits of the case and by which the complaining party was not prejudiced may be disregarded, on the review.³⁴ Thus, where a court correctly denies a motion to modify a decree, the fact that its refusal is based on wrong reasons is immaterial.³⁵

K. DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION OF CAUSE

§ 174. In General

Unless otherwise provided, the general rule is that judgment on certiorari should be that the writ or the proceedings below be quashed or affirmed.

Unless otherwise provided, the judgment on certiorari should be that the writ or the proceedings below be quashed, or that they be affirmed,³⁶ and a reviewing court has no power to annul, modify, or revoke any action of the inferior tribunal where it has regularly pursued its authority, no matter how erroneous the decision may be.³⁷ Also, it has been held that the reviewing court has no power to

In filing abstract

On certiorari to review a judgment of a court of appeals, the fact that relators filed what they called a separate abstract of the record, which was the abstract of record used in the Court of Appeals, and which was the same as the abstract made a part of return of the Court of Appeals as required, could not prejudice respondents and cannot be complained of by them.—State ex rel. Seibel v. Trimble, 253 S.W. 215, 299 Mo. 164, quashing certiorari Price v. Seibel, App., 253 S.W. 212.

Whether an amended plea, wholly failing to state a permissible defense, is eliminated, on motion to strike or on demurrer, is immaterial, where both are filed.—Hodges v. Lamar, 161 So. 81, 119 Fla. 566.

Overruling demurrers

Whether the overruling of demurrers to special counts should be regarded as harmless on the theory that the evidence conclusively showed that plaintiff was entitled to recover on the common counts or on the theory that the verdict should be referred to the common counts, although the evidence was in conflict, involves an inquiry of fact which the supreme court will not make on certiorari to review a judgment of the court of appeals.—Ex parte E. Giving effect to void judgment

While it is proper to dismiss a writ of certiorari whereby it was sought to review a void judgment, order of dismissal is invalid in so far as it attempted to give effect to such judgment.—Little v. McCalla, 93 S.E. 37, 20 Ga.App. 324.

enter a judgment on the merits of the controversy,³⁸ nor to direct the respondent to enter any particular order or judgment.³⁹ However, in some jurisdictions, the reviewing court has the power to enter a final judgment under some circumstances, as shown infra § 179.

Although a judgment of dismissal amounts practically to an affirmance, it is not strictly regular where an affirmance is intended,⁴⁰ but very respectable authorities are found to support the dismissal or quashal of the writ instead of the affirmance of the proceedings under review, and in some states the dismissal or quashal of the writ is imperative where there is no ground for the writ.⁴¹ Sometimes the court will quash the writ and affirm the proceedings,⁴² and this has been held proper practice,⁴³ but even where it is irregular such a judgment has been held not prejudicial.⁴⁴

Performance of duty of inferior tribunal

Fixing a date for submission of a proposed charter to the voters is a duty of the charter commission, which will not be performed by the supreme court on certiorari in mandamus proceedings, when passing upon the validity of prior proceedings of the commission.—Harvey v. City Commission of City of Port Huron, 196 N.W. 379, 225 Mich. 368.

38. Fla.—Tamiami Trail Tours v. Railroad Commission, 174 So. 451, 128 Fla. 25.

Dismissal of writ as final on merits

In certiorari proceedings a written finding reciting, "A re-examination of the record and of the case, is convincing that no error affirmatively appears such as requires a reversal. For that reason the writ of certiorari may be dismissed," was a final judgment on the merits.—Hartz v. Wayne Cir. Judge, 129 N.W. 15, 164 Mich. 35, 36.

Judgment is neither reversed nor affirmed on certiorari.—Great American Ins. Co. of New York v. Peters, 141 So. 322, 105 Fla. 330—Ulsch v. Mountain City Mill Co., 140 So. 218, 103 Fla. 932, 104 Fla. 418, denying rehearing 138 So. 483, 103 Fla. 932.

Inferior tribunal adjourned

On certiorari to an inferior tribunal, the court should not enter a judgment outlining what the inferior tribunal should find, where such tribunal has adjourned.—State v. Mullendore, 161 P. 949, 53 Mont. 109.

In Wisconsin

(1) In some early cases it was held reversible error to render a judgment of dismissal instead of affirming the proceedings.—Owens v. State, 27 Wis. 456—Morse v. Spees, 25 Wis. 543—McNamara v. Spees, 25 Wis. 539.

(2) However, in a later case it was stated that it is now well settled that, when the return to the writ shows the proceedings were with full jurisdiction and regularity, it may be quashed.—State v. Daubner, 87 N.W. 802, 111 Wis. 671.

Ordinarily, relief cannot be granted on entirely new grounds not presented by the applicant.⁴⁵

Treated as writ of error. In some cases a writ of certiorari improperly sued out will be treated as a writ of error and judgment entered accordingly.⁴⁶

Time of entry of judgment. In at least one jurisdiction, it is the practice in the supreme court that judgment in extraordinary and prerogative writs is entered only at such time as is specially ordered by the court.⁴⁷

§ 175. Affirmance

The writ should be dismissed or the proceedings affirmed where the reviewing court decides in favor of the respondent or where there is nothing on which the court can act.

Affirming original judgment record.⁴⁹ Where an inferior court failed to follow the last expressions of the court of last resort on a question, the court of last resort will sustain the opinion of the inferior court where it concludes that such court was right in so doing,⁵⁰ and dismissal of the certiorari where there was no error in the judgment complained of has been held proper notwithstanding the dismissal was based on a provision of a statute subsequently declared invalid.⁵¹ The judgment should be affirmance or dismissal of the writ where there is nothing on which the court can act;⁵² when it is impossible to pass intelligently upon the questions presented without exploring the transcript;⁵³ where no necessity exists for an examination of the questions involved;⁵⁴ where the proceedings sought to be reviewed are ended, leaving nothing to be determined;⁵⁵ where any judgment the reviewing court might make would be ineffectual⁵⁶ as to the real parties in interest;⁵⁷

where it is apparent that the inferior tribunal had jurisdiction and proceeded regularly;⁵⁸ or where the review is of the evidence and it is sufficient.⁵⁹ So judgment will be affirmed without consideration of the questions involved, where a statute enacted after the decision in the lower tribunal takes away all subject of controversy.⁶⁰ Likewise the judgment will be affirmed where the prosecutor has failed to proceed within a reasonable time after the filing of the return.⁶¹

§ 176. Reversal

The record or proceedings below will be quashed where it appears that the tribunal below was without jurisdiction or proceeded irregularly, but immaterial errors do not require a reversal or quashal.

Intermediate judgment

(1) Circuit court's appellate judgment can be quashed only where it has exceeded its jurisdiction, or did not proceed according to the essential requirements of the law, or violated established principles of law, or the judgment reversing the civil court of record is a palpable miscarriage of justice, or the result is a substantial injury to the legal rights of the petitioner, or the judgment sought to be reviewed is illegal or essentially irregular and violative of established principles of law, which have resulted in prejudice and material harm to the petitioner.—Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Johnson, 166 So. 442, 122 Fla. 567—Ulsch v. Mountain City Mill Co., 138 So. 483, 103 Fla. 932, rehearing denied 140 So. 213, 103 Fla. 932, 104 Fla. 418.

(2) Such a judgment cannot be quashed on certiorari for merely erroneous rulings on the law and the evidence.—Florida East Coast Ry. Co. v. Anderson, 148 So. 553, 110 Fla. 290—Des Rocher & Watkins Towing Co. v. Third Nat. Bank, 143 So. 768, 106 Fla. 466.

(3) Alleged erroneous charges, to warrant quashing on certiorari of judgment of circuit court affirming judgment of civil court of record, must be of such character that determination of cause in accordance with charges would not be in accordance with essential requirements of law.—Vanderpool v. Spruell, 139 So. 892, 104 Fla. 347.

(4) Mere error in particular charge given does not warrant quashing on certiorari of judgment of circuit court affirming judgment of civil court of record.—Vanderpool v. Spruell, supra.

(5) Mere errors in giving of abstract or inappropriate charges do not warrant quashing of judgment.—Florida East Coast Ry. Co. v. Anderson, supra—Vanderpool v. Spruell, supra.

Misapprehension of law

Where the harmless error doctrine has been applied under a misapprehension of the law and this appears on the face of the opinion, the court will reverse the inferior court and remand the case to that court for further consideration.—Liberty Nat. Life Ins. Co. v. Collier, 154 So. 118, 228 Ala. 3, reversing 154 So. 116, 26 Ala.App. 75, and certiorari denied 154 So. 119, 228 Ala. 4.

Determination against evidence

(1) On certiorari to review action of board of education, appellate division in certiorari proceeding may reverse determination of board of education, if against preponderance of evidence.—Berg v. Board of Education of City of Utica, N. Y., 229 N. Y.S. 715, 224 App.Div. 286.

(2) Where all evidence is against findings of real estate brokers' board, its decision will be reversed.—State v. Wisconsin Real Estate Brokers' Board, 206 N.W. 863, 188 Wis. 632.

Writ perpetuated

A writ of certiorari granted pending action on a devolutive appeal was perpetuated where plaintiff's possessory action was dismissed on the merits.—Brooks v. City of Shreveport, 106 So. 710, 160 La. 104—McGlothlin v. City of Shreveport, 106 So. 708, 160 La. 101.

§ 177. Affirmance in Part

Where distinct determinations or matters are each independent of the other, the court may quash, reverse, or correct one part and affirm as to the residue, but not where the several parts of the proceedings are connected and dependent on each other.

Where distinct determinations are presented for review, or the legal and illegal matters are each independent of the other, the court may quash, reverse, or correct such part or parts of the proceedings as are illegal and affirm as to the residue which are legal.⁶⁹ Thus, where in an action for debt judgment is rendered against joint defendants on the individual contract of only one of the defendants, the court will order the amendment of the judgment.⁷⁰ So where judgment is given for the recovery of a debt and also for the enforcement of a lien, and so much of the judgment as enforces the lien is in excess of the lower court's jurisdiction, the whole judgment will not be reversed, but only the portion enforcing the lien.⁷¹

However, where the several parts of the proceedings are so connected and dependent on each other that one part cannot be quashed without leaving the other incomplete or more extensive than it should be, the whole of the proceedings in all its separate parts must be set aside.⁷² Thus, where an award is incapable of severance and is erroneous as to certain items of damages, it should be set aside in its entirety.⁷³

Judgment against tort-feasors. Where in trover there is a total lack of evidence as to one of two defendants, it has been held that a judgment against them both should be reversed in toto, and not merely as to the one against whom there is no proof;⁷⁴ and this is so in trespass against two defendants.⁷⁵

§ 178. Modification

Where the power exists, the court may correct or modify the judgment or determination.

If the court has power to correct or modify the judgment or determination complained of, it may do so, and need not reverse absolutely;⁷⁶ and it has been held that the reviewing court may modify an order complained of without passing on the question whether it is void or simply voidable.⁷⁷ However, if a judgment is void for want of jurisdiction, the court on certiorari has no authority to modify or reduce it in amount or otherwise.⁷⁸

§ 179. Power to Render New Judgment

In some jurisdictions, by virtue of statute or otherwise, final judgment may be rendered in a proper case by the reviewing court on certiorari.

Only as to excess of jurisdiction

A court's statutory power to modify an inferior tribunal's proceedings on certiorari can be exercised only to change the inferior tribunal's action in excess of its jurisdiction.—Fuller v. Board of Medical Examiners, 59 P.2d 171, 14 Cal.App.2d 734.

In damage suits, the supreme court will not amend the judgment as to the amount, except in rare cases where the amount allowed is manifestly too small or too large.—

As to party not complaining

In reviewing the judgment of a lower court on certiorari at the instance of one of the parties to the suit, the court will not amend the judgment to his prejudice and to the advantage of the party who has not complained.—Brown v. Tauzin, 168 So. 502, 185 La. 86, annulling, App., 163 So. 764—Foley v. National Life & Accident Ins. Co., 162 So. 798, 183 La. 49, annulling, App., 156 So. 35—*Succession of Watson v. er to render a new judgment such as the inferior tribunal should have rendered but can only remand for further proceedings or a new trial,⁷⁹ in some jurisdictions, by statute or otherwise, final judgment may be rendered by the reviewing court, without remanding the cause, in a proper case.⁸⁰ However, it has been held that the power to enter up a new judgment is limited to the judgment that could and should have been rendered by the lower court.⁸¹

Where trial de novo. Where provision is made for a trial de novo, the cause stands in the reviewing court as if it had originated there, and a judgment of dismissal, or on the merits, may be rendered as in other cases;⁸² and if the trial is de novo an order cannot be reversed because made by a judge disqualified to sit, since the matter must be retried on the merits as if an original suit.⁸³

In Georgia the form of the judgment is regulated by statute; and thereunder it is the duty of the court to render final judgment if an error of law which must finally govern the case is found,⁸⁴ as where the court below was without jurisdiction of the subject matter,⁸⁵ or where the case involves both law and facts, when there is no dispute as to the facts.⁸⁶ Also, when the finding of the trial court should be and is sustained and the certiorari overruled, there is no error in rendering final judgment,⁸⁷ and, when a certiorari bond has been given, this is the better procedure.⁸⁸ However, it is not proper to render final judgment if a question of fact is involved which makes it necessary for a new trial.⁸⁹ Also, if a certiorari, after being sanc-

Subsequent events requiring new judgment

Where subsequent events have rendered the relief granted unavailing, the reviewing court may render a new judgment giving proper relief.—Canal Constr. Co. v. Schlickum, 102 N.W. 737, 139 Mich. 246.

Dismissal in trial court as to codefendant

Where case was dismissed as to a codefendant in the trial court, an upper court, on certiorari to an inferior appellate court, has no jurisdiction to render any judgment as to the codefendant.—Brown v. Tauzin, 168 So. 502, 185 La. 86, annulling, App., 163 So. 764.

Decision constituting denial of new trial

Where superior court denied new trial in overruling plaintiff's certiorari, brought to review judgment of appellate division reversing judgment of Atlanta municipal court refusing defendant new trial, denial constituted effort to render final judgment against plaintiff, and was improper because questions of fact were involved.—Tyler v. National tioned by the judge of the superior court, is dismissed on the hearing before him for the reason that it does not properly appear that costs have been paid, the judgment dismissing it is equivalent to holding that the proceeding is void, and, there being no legal writ before him, the court is therefore without jurisdiction to entertain the proceeding for the purpose of rendering its own final decision in the case, including judgment against the surety on the certiorari bond.⁹⁰

§ 180. Statement of Findings and Conclusions

In some jurisdictions the court is required to state the facts found and the conclusions of law thereon.

If the court is required to state the facts found and the conclusions of law thereon, it cannot dismiss on the merits without stating such facts and conclusions.⁹¹

§ 181. Remand

While a case will not be remanded where no further proceedings can be taken, in a proper case the determination may be remitted for modification or correction or for further proceedings.

In some jurisdictions, in a proper case, the determination may be remitted for modification or correction,⁹² or for further proceedings,⁹³ with directions or instructions to the court below.⁹⁴ Thus, where there has been no determination on the merits,⁹⁵ where the judgment is found to be erroneous and the evidence is insufficient to establish the basis of a judgment that will do justice between the parties,⁹⁶ where a judgment is reversed

Scope of hearing after remand

Where United States supreme court granted certiorari after second appeal in equity cause and remanded cause to district court with direction to vacate its decree, to permit amendment of pleadings, and to retry cause on issues thus presented because of error in order made on first appeal, district court properly set its prior decrees aside, permitted filing of amended pleadings, and set case down for hearing de novo, as against contention that hearing should have been limited to matters which had occurred after first appeal.—Duke Power Co. v. Questions of fact

Wherever an issue is made by the pleadings, and evidence must be introduced to maintain the issue, controverted questions of fact are involved in the case which include not only evidentiary facts, but ultimate facts, even though there be no conflict in the testimony, or the evidence may be embodied in a stipulation of facts, and, since the supreme court is precluded from reviewing controverted questions of fact presented by contentions of the parties in their pleadings, where the appellate court has erroneously reversed on one branch of the case without considering certain controverted issues of fact, the supreme court must remand the cause to the appellate court to consider questions of fact involved.—Armstrong Paint & Varnish Works v. Continental Can Co., 133 N.E. 711, 301 Ill. 102, reversing 220 Ill.App. 90.

for an error not decisive of the merits,⁹⁷ or where the inferior tribunal has not proceeded according to law,⁹⁸ the reviewing court will remand the case. Also, the lower court, after its opinion has been quashed on certiorari as being in conflict with the decisions of the supreme court, has been held to have jurisdiction to dispose of the case on the merits,⁹⁹ and when an appellate court quashes the judgment on certiorari of an intermediate court, it has been held that the cause is again remitted to that court, which may render another judgment not in conflict with the holding of the appellate court,¹ and a petition seeking a new trial and permission to plead should be presented to that court.² However, the quashing of an opinion of a lower court does not necessarily call for a retrial in such court, and if the submission is set aside after the opinion is quashed, the parties may be given time for reargument, and a statement in the lower court's opinion that the case was again submitted after the former opinion was quashed, conclusively shows that the former submission was set aside.³

Under statutes in some jurisdictions, where the answer of the trial judge states that he cannot or does not remember or recollect what occurred on the trial of the case, it is the duty of the judge on certiorari to forthwith order a new trial in the lower court;⁴ and where a justice or ordinary dies before answering a certiorari served, the judge who granted the certiorari must order a new trial in the court below.⁵

Reversal for formal and minor irregularities. When the reversal is neither because of excess of jurisdiction nor for the reason that the form of proceeding legally applicable to the case was not followed, but because the court failed to exercise jurisdiction,⁶ or because the court entered judgment in improper form or made an order which is incomplete,⁷ the practice is to remand the case; and the cause will be remanded where the court has made some erroneous order or ruling which does not affect the regularity of the entire proceedings.⁸

Where no further proceedings can be taken, the case will not be remanded.⁹

When remand effective. It has been held that, when the record of the cause has been remitted to the lower tribunal by the reviewing court, the former has authority to proceed therein, although the § 182. Restitution

In a proper case the reviewing court may order restitution on annulling the proceedings below.

On annulling the proceedings below, the reviewing court may order restitution to a relator who has suffered by the illegal action,¹¹ but where a fine and costs have been voluntarily paid by defendant before the issuance of a writ of certiorari, he is not entitled to a writ of restitution.¹² Of course, where money has been collected on a judgment before reversal on certiorari, but subsequently the money is refunded, a writ of restitution should not issue.¹³

§ 183. Effect of Judgment

The decision of the reviewing court is the law of the case, and an affirmance establishes the rights of the parties as originally found, while on reversal the whole case falls. Dismissal of the writ in the discretion of the court is not res judicata as to the validity of the proceedings; and as to persons not parties the decision is not conclusive.

The decision of the court on certiorari is the law of the case;¹⁴ and a judgment in certiorari proceedings quashing the record of a civil service commission discharging an employee has been held self-executing, and requires no process of any kind to enforce it.¹⁵

An affirmance of the adjudication complained of establishes the rights of the parties as originally found,¹⁶ and the determination stands as of the time when made.¹⁷ However, the rulings of the court on certiorari with respect to an order of the lower court, requiring a party to produce documents for inspection have been held not binding on the materiality of such documents when they are offered in evidence and the lower court has an opportunity to inspect them.¹⁸

On reversal, the whole case falls,¹⁹ as well as incidental proceedings dependent thereon,²⁰ and, at least in one jurisdiction, setting aside municipal proceedings concludes the right of the matter as against respondents and furnishes record evidence precluding them from setting up the nullified proceedings against either the prosecutor or the state.²¹ However, in determining the general liability of a municipality, the court does not adjudicate the sufficiency of the particular claim presented.²²

A judgment that the opinion and record brought up for review are quashed has been held to quash only the judgment, opinion, and record of the intermediate appellate court, such being the only one subject to review on the writ of certiorari;²³ and where a new trial is granted by the trial court after

Demurrer free from error

The ruling of the supreme court on certiorari to review a judgment of the court of appeals that no question as to the failure of a count to allege a valuable consideration for defendant's acceptance of a non-negotiable order was raised because the demurrer contained no objection that the consideration was not averred was tantamount to a decision that the overruling of the demurrer was free from error.—Ex parte E. Erroneous order not appealed

Erroneous order dismissing custodian of public buildings as one of defendants in proceedings by former janitor foreman of state house to obtain reinstatement, where not appealed from, was "law of case," precluding janitor foreman from reasserting action against custodian.—Pittington v. On quashing on certiorari of record of bill of complaint against police officials to enjoin enforcement of gambling statute against possessors of pin game machines and restraining order issued therein, prayer to quash citation for contempt of restraining order was not granted where it appeared that, on disavowal of intention to act contemptuously, citation for contempt would be quashed by court by which it was issued.—Conte v. an appellate court on certiorari quashed the judgment of the trial court in so far as it exceeded the verdict, it was held that such quashal by the appellate court does not preclude trying issues raised by the pleadings or other issues raised by additional pleadings filed by permission of the trial court.²⁴ A judgment on certiorari annulling a decision which set aside a default judgment without application or hearing has been held not an adjudication that the default judgment might not be set aside at all, but only that it had been set aside in an improper manner;²⁵ and a judgment on certiorari which reversed a decision of a lower court that a particular statute of limitations was applicable has been held not to adjudicate the question of whether the applicable statute was tolled until the appointment and qualification of an administrator.²⁶ Also, where a demurrer was sustained on appeal on grounds which were held insufficient, on certiorari, to defeat recovery, it is open to the lower court to deal with the claim that the petition is barred by limitations.²⁷ Where certiorari is dismissed because the proceedings were not filed within the required time, the petition and writ are invalid, and there is no case pending which can be recommenced within the statutory period for recommencing dismissed cases.²⁸

As to persons not parties to the litigation on certiorari, the judgment is not conclusive,²⁹ and where the judgment of an intermediate appellate court was reversed by a higher court on a petition for certiorari to which only one of two defendants was a party, the judgment of such intermediate court in so far as it related to the codefendant of the petitioner for certiorari was not affected by the judgment of the higher court.³⁰ However, if the matter is one of general public interest, the reversal inures to the benefit of all persons similarly affected as well as to those who sued out the writ.³¹

Res judicata. Since the dismissal of the writ rests in the sound discretion of the court, it is not in subsequent proceedings res judicata as to the validity of the proceedings which were sought to be reviewed,³² and a determination denying a certiorari does not become res judicata so as to work an estoppel, where the record fails to show the ground or grounds alleged by a petitioner in his application for the writ or the answer of respondent, and the point in litigation is not apparent nor the reasons for the denial of the writ.³³ The affirmance in a subsequent suit against the prosecutor of the writ is res judicata as to the validity of the proceedings.³⁴

Successive writs. The effect of the judgment, as a bar to subsequent applications for the writ, has already been noticed in § 21.

§ 184. Amendment of Judgment

The judgment may be amended in a proper case.

That the judgment of the reviewing court may be amended in a proper case does not admit of doubt, but the amendment may be denied because of laches.³⁵

Amendment of own judgment by inferior tribunal. A writ of certiorari stays the proceedings in the inferior tribunal as shown supra § 108 et seq., and also tolls the term of court so far as jurisdiction of the inferior court over the case is concerned, but such court may, after the term at which its decision was rendered and in accordance with the ruling of the appellate court, modify, change, amend, and revise its decision while the case is still pending in that court.³⁶

Agreed damages, omitted from decree on certiorari by oversight of supreme court, will be allowed by amendment without rehearing.—Groves & Rosenblath v. Atkins, supra.

To remand case

Where supreme court had granted certiorari to review lower court's quashing of distress warrants for taxes, and entered decree quashing lower court's writs but neglected to remand proceedings to lower court, supreme court will, under statute, amend its decree to require further proceedings below consistent with the opinion, particularly proceedings for restitution of goods taken from sheriff when distress warrants were quashed.—Fort v. Dixie Oil Co., Tenn., 101 S.W.2d 692.

§ 185. Compliance with Judgment

An inferior tribunal must follow a mandate issued on certiorari.

Where a judgment of reversal is at once complied with, the relator cannot complain of a failure to wait until the time for a rehearing had elapsed;³⁷ and where the writ is dismissed, and the entry of a void judgment secured by defendant's counsel, it is not error to enter up a proper judgment within a reasonable time after the void judgment is declared a nullity.³⁸ If the certiorari to review an injunction order is sustained, it is proper for the lower court to reopen the original cause and to hear further testimony;³⁹ but the jurisdiction of the court deciding the certiorari to issue a particular mandate cannot be inquired into by the lower court.⁴⁰

Where a mandate is issued on certiorari, the inferior tribunal must follow it;⁴¹ and while an opinion of a lower court adopting its quashed opinion so far as not inconsistent with the upper court's decision on certiorari has been held unusual, objections thereto were dismissed.⁴²

In some jurisdictions, where a judgment by an intermediate appellate court is reversed by a higher court on certiorari, the intermediate court must vacate its former judgment and enter judgment in accordance with that of the higher court.⁴³

a. In General

In the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, a court's determination on certiorari may generally be reviewed by the tribunal possessing appellate jurisdiction over such court.

A court's determination on certiorari may generally be reviewed by the tribunal, if any, possessing appellate jurisdiction over such court,⁴⁴ unless it is otherwise provided by statute.⁴⁵

Matters not reversed

Court of appeals' ruling that evidence authorized verdict, not considered on certiorari to supreme court, which reversed case on another ground, was adhered to in conforming opinion of court of appeals.—*Gaines v. As exclusive remedy

Where there is a judgment on the merits of a certiorari, if it was erroneous, the remedy is by writ of error and not by renewal of the action by a second certiorari.—Smith v. J. M. Walkeen Millinery Co., 76 S.E. 992, 12 Ga.App. 119.

45. Order of zoning boards

(1) A circuit court's order on certiorari to review the action of the board of zoning appeals was held not reviewable by the supreme court on appeal or writ of error, since the proceedings are controlled by statute, which does not authorize a review of the judgment of the court of record reviewing the decision of the board of appeals, and since the writ of certiorari is a special statutory writ and the proceeding is not a suit in equity or a proceeding at law within Pract. Act § 91—Phelps v. Board of Appeals of City of Chicago, 156 N.E. 826, 325 Ill. 625—Petition of Forbes, 146 N.E. 448, 316 Ill. 141.

(2) The statute governing appeals from the board of zoning appeals to the circuit and superior courts makes no provision for an appeal from those courts, and it follows that no appeal lies to the appellate court unless the general provision of the Code of Civil Procedure is applicable, and we find nothing in the peace see C.J.S. title Justices of the Peace § 266, also 35 C.J. p 886 notes 13, 14.

Grounds. The only proper ground of appeal from a judgment of a court which has reviewed a judgment on certiorari has been held to be that the reviewing court erred in giving judgment for respondent instead of appellant.⁴⁶

Joinder. If two cases, although tried together by consent of counsel, are between different parties, one writ of error is insufficient, as was one petition for certiorari.⁴⁷

b. Discretionary Action

In cases where an order in certiorari proceedings is discretionary with the lower court, there is a conflict of authority as to whether such orders are reviewable on appeal or writ of error.

In some jurisdictions an order granting or refusing or quashing a common-law certiorari is so far discretionary with the lower court that it is not reviewable on appeal or error,⁴⁸ at least in certain courts.⁴⁹ In other jurisdictions, it seems that, notwithstanding the discretionary nature of the act, the determination is reviewable to discover whether there has been an abuse of discretion,⁵⁰ and this rule is so declared by statute in some jurisdictions.⁵¹

However, where the order in the certiorari proceeding was not made in the exercise of its discretion by the lower court, the order is appealable.⁵² Thus, if the granting of the writ is a matter of right, as it is under some statutes relating to particular matters, an appeal lies.⁵³ Also, although the granting of the writ is discretionary, when the writ has once been granted and the record certified in obedience thereto, the questions arising on such record must be determined according to fixed rules of law, and such determination is reviewable by a writ of error.⁵⁴

c. Finality of Determination

Generally, an appeal or writ of error will not lie unless there has been a final judgment or order in the certiorari proceeding.

Civil Code authorizing this appeal.—Luten v. Schmidt, 163 N.E. 536, 88 Ind.App. 134.

In Pennsylvania

(1) By statute, the judgment of the court of common pleas is final on all proceedings removed by certiorari to such court, and no writ of error can issue thereon.—Palmer v. Lacock, 107 Pa. 346—Silvergood v. Storrick, 1 Watts 532—Allegheny L. & T. Co. v. Gundling, 33 Pa.Super. 621—Fry v. Spatz, 29 Pa.Super. 592—*Phoenix Iron Works Co. v. (2) The provision of the statute extends to "every judgment or proceeding of that court on writs of certiorari . . . whether as regards reversal, costs, executions, or any other matter."—Silvergood v. Storrick, 1 Watts 532, 533.

Rule to show cause

Dismissal of rule to show cause why writ of certiorari should not issue is not appealable notwithstanding stipulation of parties that determination of court on hearing on rule should operate as final determination on merits, as the parties cannot thus deprive the supreme court of its discretion.—Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Board of Public Utility Com'rs of New Jersey, 184 A. 842, 116 N.J.Law 527, dismissing appeal 180 A. 551, 13 N.J.Misc. 766.

Dismissal because improvidently granted

An order dismissing the writ on the ground that it was improvidently granted, because of the laches of the prosecutor, is discretionary so as not to be reviewable by a writ of error.—Atlantic City Water Works Co. v. Read, 15 A. 10, 50 N.J.Law 665—State v. Jersey City, 43 N.J.Law 662.

Discretion regulated by precedent

It has been held that, while the granting of the writ is discretionary, yet the discretion is regulated by precedent and established principle, and if such discretion is in any case abused the grant or refusal of the writ may be reviewed by appeal or error.—Michaelson v. Cautley, 32

Prior to the statute, the order was not appealable where discretionary.—Carter v. Douglass, 2 Ala. 499.

52. N.Y.—People ex rel. Dawley v. Wilson, 133 N.E. 45, 232 N.Y. 12, reversing 189 N.Y.S. 585, 198 App. Div. 158, reargument denied 134 N.E. 563, 232 N.Y. 540.

11 C.J. p 217 note 45 [c].

All facts one way

The denial of certiorari where all the facts tend to favor the issuance of the writ is subject to review, as in such circumstances the principle of judicial discretion has no application.—Brown v. City Council of City of Long Beach, Cal.App., 258 P. 693.

Dismissal as matter of law

Where the order dismissing certiorari is silent as to the reason, but the opinion indicates it was dismissed as a matter of law and not in the exercise of discretion, the order is appealable.—People ex rel. Dawley v. Wilson, 133 N.E. 45, 232 N.Y. 12, reversing 189 N.Y.S. 585, 198 App. Div. 158, reargument denied 134 N.E. 563, 232 N.Y. 540.

53. N.Y.—Matter of Corwin, 32 N.E. 16, 135 N.Y. 245.

54. Tenn.—City of Knoxville v. Connors, 201 S.W. 133, 139 Tenn. 45.

11 C.J. p 218 note 71.

In many jurisdictions an appeal will not lie unless there has been a final judgment or order.⁵⁵ This finality of the judgment refers to the judgment rendered in the certiorari proceeding and not to that of the judgment excepted to in the petition for certiorari.⁵⁶

In accordance with this rule, an appeal will not lie from an order refusing to quash a writ;⁵⁷ from an order allowing a writ;⁵⁸ from an order sustaining a demurrer to the petition for the writ,⁵⁹ where the petitioner for certiorari did not elect to stand on his petition;⁶⁰ from the refusal to grant a motion to dismiss a petition for the writ;⁶¹ from an order denying a motion for reargument of a motion to vacate the writ;⁶² from an order denying an application made on the hearing;⁶³ from an order overruling a motion for a new trial of a traverse of the answer;⁶⁴ from an order denying a motion to require amendment of the return⁶⁵ or directing a further return;⁶⁶ or from an order directing the clerk to send up a transcript of the record and proceedings.⁶⁷ So, an order not only reversing an order quashing a writ of certiorari but also reinstating the writ and remitting the proceedings to the court entertaining the certiorari for a determination on the merits is not an order finally determining a special proceeding, and hence is not appealable.⁶⁸

On the other hand, an order quashing a writ,⁶⁹ an order denying or overruling the writ,⁷⁰ where no issue of fact was tendered,⁷¹ or an order made on a motion to supersede a writ,⁷² or on a motion to dismiss the certiorari⁷³ has been held a final judgment or order and appealable if otherwise an appeal lies.

d. Amount in Controversy

The right of review of a judgment or order in a certiorari proceeding is sometimes dependent on the amount in controversy.

55. N.Y.—Factory Mut. Liability Ins. Co. of America v. Van Schaick, 182 N.E. 185, 259 N.Y. 571, dismissing appeal Factory Mut. Liability Ins. Co. of America v. Behan, 253 N.Y.S. 562, 233 App.Div. 614. 3 C.J. p 554 notes 61, 63—11 C.J. p 217 note 58.

"Judgment" treated as "order"

Determination in certiorari proceeding, although styled as a judgment, should be treated as a final order within statute granting right of appeal except in cases where law specifically prohibits review.—People ex rel. Schick v. Marvin, 283 N.Y.S. 203, 246 App.Div. 71, reversed on other grounds 2 N.E.2d 634, 271 N.Y. 219.

Remedy by motion

Where certain directions contained in a writ of certiorari were not pertinent to the grievances alleged therein, the remedy is by a motion to modify, and not by an appeal from the order for a further return.—Peo. v. Feitner, 56 N.Y.S. 93, 37 App. Div. 362.

Discretionary

Where, on a writ of review of proceedings of a justice of the peace, the case had been determined by the circuit court, a motion by the defeated party to open the judgment so as to require the justice to make a more complete return to the writ will be treated as a motion for a new trial, denial of which is not reviewable except in case of manifest abuse of discretion.—*White v. Dismissal of petition not necessary

An order quashing a writ of certiorari is final and appealable without dismissal of the petition.—Funkhouser v. Coffin, 133 N.E. 649, 301 Ill. 257, affirming 221 Ill.App. 14.

Suit dismissed on general demurrer

Where the suit was dismissed on general demurrer and plaintiff's certiorari was overruled in the superior court, the judgment overruling the certiorari was a final disposition of the case, and one from which a bill of exceptions would lie to the court of appeals.—United Cigar Stores Co. v. Georgia Ry. & Power Co., supra.

Motion identical with demurrer

Since the function of a motion to supersede a writ of certiorari is identical with that of a demurrer to a pleading, in that it presents the question whether there is a ground of relief stated, the order on such motion is appealable.—State v. Haugen, supra.

Want of jurisdiction

(1) It has been held that, on appeal from a judgment of the county court, on certiorari, in a case in which it had no jurisdiction to grant the writ, the supreme court will render judgment dismissing the writ, although the want of jurisdiction was not objected to in the county court.—Winn v. Freele, 19 Ala. 171.

(2) Where an objection to a writ of certiorari went to the jurisdiction of the superior court, in that the writ was issued by a husband, against whom no judgment had been entered, to review a judgment against his wife, such objection might properly be raised in the appellate court for the first time.—Okerlind v. Fyke, 90 Ill.App. 192.

(3) The failure to object in superior court to appropriateness of writs of certiorari and prohibition to review action of board of dental examiners in revoking practitioners' licenses was not a waiver of right to object on appeal, since, if that were the case, jurisdiction could be conferred by the parties, and that

§ 188. Presentation and Reservation in Lower Court of Grounds of Review

Generally, questions not raised and properly preserved for review in the trial court or in the certiorari proceeding will not be noticed on appeal.

The general rules governing all appeals and writs of error as to preserving questions for review by objections, exceptions, etc., in the lower court are applicable; and generally questions of whatever nature, not raised and properly preserved for review in the trial court or in the certiorari proceeding, will not be noticed on appeal.⁷⁸ Thus, in some jurisdictions, sometimes by virtue of statutory provisions, questions not referred to in the petition for certiorari will not be considered.⁷⁹ However, the cannot be done.—Jacobs v. Board of Dental Examiners, Cal.App., 75 P.2d 96.

Specific objection necessary

Where it does not appear what objection was made to a bond, and it is not alleged in motion to dismiss certiorari, wherein bond was deficient, no question is raised for review.—Abercrombie v. Gurley, 94 S.E. 606, 21 Ga.App. 389.

Objection as to parties

Individuals sued and answering as members of township board, in certiorari to quash ouster of constable and appointment of successor, cannot question regularity of proceeding for failure to join township as party defendant on appeal from judgment for relator.—State ex rel. Davidson v. Caldwell, 276 S.W. 631, 310 Mo. 397.

Defects in pleading

Court of appeals cannot consider motion to dismiss certiorari based on defects in pleadings or alleged errors in proceeding regarding which no question was raised in trial court.—Southern Pac. Co. v. Davison-Paxon Co., 165 S.E. 862, 45 Ga.App. 719.

Opinion testimony

Testimony of witness that he considered place sought to be abated a public nuisance, although opinion unsupported by facts, could not be challenged for first time on review where not objected to at trial.—O'Quinn v. Mayor and Council of Homerville, 157 S.E. 109, 42 Ga.App. 628.

Knowledge of statute presumed

Petitioner for certiorari is conclusively presumed to know of statute preventing grant of certiorari making of a motion to quash or dismiss the writ has been held not necessary to present for review the objection that the writ was not applied for within the statutory time after judgment.⁸⁰

§ 189. Parties

An appeal may be prosecuted by a party named in the writ, but persons not parties to the certiorari proceeding are not proper or necessary parties to a bill of exceptions excepting to the judgment therein. An appeal may be prosecuted by, and in the name of, a court.

An appeal may be prosecuted by a party named in the writ,⁸¹ or on his decease pending an appeal, his personal representatives may be substituted.⁸² On the other hand, it would seem that a person who has not such interest as entitles him to bring certiorari cannot take an appeal or sue out a writ of error to review a determination in certiorari,⁸³ but a person who is denied leave to intervene as a taxpayer in a certiorari proceeding may appeal or bring a writ of error to review such ruling.⁸⁴ Where the proceeding is prosecuted by a nominal party who is the attorney for the real party in interest, such objection being one which could be cured by amendment, the court on appeal will treat it as if the amendment was made.⁸⁵

Parties to certiorari are proper parties to a bill of exceptions excepting to the judgment therein,⁸⁶ and conversely, one not a party to certiorari is not a proper or necessary party to such a bill of exceptions,⁸⁷ and should not be made a party to the bill even on his own application.⁸⁸

Court. It has been held that an appeal may be prosecuted by, and in the name of, a court.⁸⁹

§ 190. Requisites and Proceedings for Transfer of Cause

The necessity of permission and other prerequisites to appeal is a matter of local statutory regulation.

In some jurisdictions, the decision of an appellate court annulling the determination of a quasi-judicial body is treated by a higher court as a reversal, and permission to appeal is not necessary where the order of certiorari is returnable in the first instance in such appellate court, and in such a case a motion for permission to appeal will be denied.⁹⁰

§ 191. — Time of Taking and Notice

The appellant must comply with statutory provisions and rules of court as to the time of taking the appeal and the giving of notice thereof.

The appeal must be taken within the time prescribed by statute, the provisions of which cannot be altered or extended by the parties.⁹¹ Conversely, an appeal or proceeding in error taken or commenced before the right to take the same has accrued is premature and will be dismissed for want of jurisdiction;⁹² and the certification of a certiorari proceeding on agreement of the parties, be-and must raise question of unconstitutionality in petition, although question did not appear until trial judge's decision.—Hutchings v. Roquemore, 139 S.E. 216, 164 Ga. 637.

Rehearing after statute held invalid

Where a statute abolishing the writ of certiorari from certain courts was not questioned or passed on in the certiorari proceeding, an appellate court will not, on rehearing, reverse its former decision upholding the denial of the writ, notwithstanding the supreme court in the interim has held such statute invalid.—Anderson v. West Lumber Co., 180 S.E. 361, 51 Ga.App. 333, denying rehearing 179 S.E. 738, 51 Ga.App. 333.

ore the writ was ordered to issue, has been held premature.⁹³

Notice of appeal must be in the form prescribed by statute.⁹⁴

§ 192. Supersedeas

Generally, an appeal from a decision on certiorari does not act as a supersedeas, but compliance with statutory provisions therefor is necessary.

In the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, an appeal from a decision on certiorari does not of itself act as a supersedeas,⁹⁵ and the party appealing, in order to obtain a supersedeas, must comply with the law authorizing the supersedeas.⁹⁶ It has been held that a writ of supersedeas will not issue from the supreme court to stay a judgment of the lower court in certiorari proceedings, pending an appeal, where it appears that the controversy will have ceased at the time of the hearing of the appeal in regular course.⁹⁷ The appeal will not be dismissed because an appeal bond contains language making it in form both an appeal and a supersedeas bond, where no stay was permissible, but it is evident that the purpose of the bond was merely to perfect the appeal.⁹⁸

Summary review. While the lower court is without power to render judgment until exceptions, taken and allowed under statutes providing for summary review, are disposed of,⁹⁹ an order for judgment pending a bill of exceptions was held permissible on certiorari to show that the petitioners did not desire to amend the petition.¹

§ 193. Record and Assignment of Errors

- a. Assignment of errors

Right to injunction on failure to obtain supersedeas

Where party against whom judgment is rendered fails on taking case from superior court to court of appeals to obtain supersedeas under Civ.Code 1910 § 6165, plaintiff in judgment can proceed to enforce it, and defendant would not be entitled to injunction to prevent its enforcement until disposition of case by court of appeals or until termination of garnishment proceedings instituted against defendant by plaintiff's creditors, nor to prevent plaintiff from inducing creditors to institute garnishment proceedings against defendant.—Equitable Life Assur. Multifariousness

Assignment of error in appeal from determination on certiorari in overruling exceptions, stating numerous, varied, and distinct objections to trial court's charge is multifarious, and need not be considered.—Mathews v. Autry, Tex.Civ.App., 65 S.W.2d 798.

Assignments held sufficient therein, and that the court should have sustained it, was sufficient to present for review the questions of law made by the petition and answer.—Buchman v. Rogers, 113 S.E. 230, 29 Ga.App. 62.

(3) An assignment that judge of superior court erred in dismissing certiorari sufficiently showed that the ruling was excepted to.—Hines v. Porter, 106 S.E. 16, 26 Ga.App. 178.

(4) Error in striking out the transcript of evidence given at hearing against a police officer before a civil service commission is sufficiently raised by an assignment that the lower court "erred in quashing the proceedings of the Civil Service Commission, as set forth in the return."—Buttimer v. Geary, 229 Ill. App. 524.

(5) Assignment that judgment was contrary to law and evidence was held equivalent of saying court erred in rendering judgment.—Leathers v. Waters, 134 S.E. 806, 35 Ga.App. 757.

(6) Assigning error to the overruling of certiorari as contrary to the law and the evidence, on the ground that under the law applicable and under the evidence the court should have sustained the certiorari and erred in overruling it, and in refusing to sustain it, is sufficiently specific.—Chandler v. struing a particular statute has been held to warrant consideration on the merits of an appeal from a judgment on certiorari, notwithstanding a non-compliance with rules requiring a specific statement of the errors assigned;⁴ and in at least one jurisdiction, where the cause is removed by writ of error, it has been held that special assignments of error are not required, but those stated in the affidavit for the writ will be deemed sufficient.⁵

b. Record

- (1) In general
- (2) Bill of exceptions
- (3) Petition for writ as part of record
- (4) Evidence
- (5) Conclusiveness of statements

(1) In General

Generally, the appellate court will consider only matters shown by the record proper or presented by a bill of exceptions, etc., embodied in the record on appeal.

In those states in which an appeal may be taken in cases of certiorari, the appellate court will confine itself to an examination of the record, and matter not appearing thereon will not be considered;⁶

and it is essential to the jurisdiction of the appellate court that the record show that the writ was issued and a return made,⁷ and if the record is incomplete and does not show a final verdict or judgment, no review can be had.⁸ So, where errors are not affirmatively shown, the court will not look beyond the record to discover errors not apparent therein,⁹ nor will the court go behind the return to the writ to review proceedings not stated therein.¹⁰ The appellate court will not treat that as a return to the writ which the trial court did not so treat,¹¹ and an amended return filed after the submission of the case and not shown to have been considered below cannot be considered,¹² and the appellate court will disregard conclusions of fact in the return, where not within the scope of the terms of the writ.¹³

(2) Bill of Exceptions

Ordinarily, the record should contain a proper bill of exceptions to authorize a review of the alleged errors.

While it has been held that a bill of exceptions is not necessary if error appears on the face of the proceedings,¹⁴ ordinarily, to authorize a review of

Reasoning of lower court

Reasons filed below

On the argument in appeal in certiorari reliance may be had on the reasons filed in the court below and brought up with the record.—Burhans v. City of Paterson, supra.

Assignments insufficient

(1) Supreme court Rules, rule 15, and Rev.St.1919 § 1511, requiring specific statement of errors assigned, are not complied with by grouping under title of assignment of errors such specifications as invalidity, fatal misdirection, and unavailability of writ of certiorari, waiver thereof by relator, pendency of another suit by relator, etc.—State ex rel. Davidson v. Caldwell, 276 S.W. 631, 310 Mo. 397.

(2) Grounds of appeal, alleging error in admission of incompetent testimony and exclusion of competent testimony, were too general and indefinite.—State ex rel. Horton v. Clark, 9 S.W.2d 635, 320 Mo. 1190.

No error assigned

On objections to certiorari bond and affidavit presented in brief, where no error is assigned thereon in bill of exceptions, and no judgment overruling objection to affidavit and bond is complained of, court of appeals, under Civ.Code 1910 § 6203, cannot determine sufficiency of affidavits and bond in record.—Morrison v. Brown, 94 S.E. 85, 21 Ga.App. 217.

Judgment not on merits

In view of Code Civ.Proc. § 1077, it has been held that a judgment in certiorari would be treated as a dismissal of petition, and not final determination on merits, the judgment roll showing neither return nor writ.—Donovan v. Board of Police Com'rs of City and County of San Francisco, 163 P. 69, 32 Cal.App. 392.

Amendment of pleading and admission of evidence

Where answer of magistrate to petition for certiorari to which no traverse or exception was filed did not show petitioner's objections to allowance of amendment of plea or to admission of evidence, appellate court could not say that trial court erred in allowing amendment or in admitting evidence.—Sparks v. Void order so appearing

On appeal from a decree in certiorari refusing to vacate a part of an alleged errors, the record should contain a proper bill of exceptions.¹⁵

Embodying a petition for the writ in the bill of exceptions is treated infra this section, subdivision b (3).

Amendment. Where the judgment excepted to expressly recited that the certiorari was overruled, a proposed amendment to the bill of exceptions reciting that the certiorari was erroneously dismissed should be allowed, although it is not necessary.¹⁶

(3) Petition for Writ as Part of Record

A petition for the writ should be embodied in the bill of exceptions or verified as a part thereof.

It seems that the petition for the writ is not a part of, and should not be included in, the record,¹⁷ and where the court refuses to sanction the petition, it should be embodied in a bill of exceptions or verified as a part thereof by the judge who refused to sanction it.¹⁸

(4) Evidence

The record should contain a statement of the substance of the evidence.

It has been held that the record on appeal in a certiorari proceeding must contain a statement of the substance of the evidence.¹⁹ However, a statute permitting a court to take evidence on certiorari to a quasi-judicial body does not make such evidence a part of the record, and such evidence is not before the reviewing court without a bill of exceptions.²⁰

(5) Conclusiveness of Statements

Undisputed statements will be taken as true, but statements in the return to the writ will be taken as true where in conflict with the statements of the petition for the writ or in conflict with the findings of fact by the reviewing court.

order of the county commissioners' court on the ground that it was void, there was no occasion for a bill of exceptions, where the order, if void, so appeared on the face of the proceedings.—Mills v. Court of Com'rs of Conecuh County, supra.

Motion to quash writ and the ruling of the court thereon should be set forth in the bill of exceptions.—Southern R. Co. v. Graham, 58 So. 672, 4 Ala.App. 398—11 C.J. p 169 note 49.

When tendered

The bill of exceptions must be tendered within the time allowed by statute or court rule after the decision on certiorari.—Jennings v. State, 144 S.E. 147, 38 Ga.App. 454.

Expressly excepting to judgment

Where an assignment in the bill of exceptions charged that the judgment was erroneous, it is not necessary that the bill of exceptions expressly except to, and complain of, the judgment.—Leathers v. Waters, 134 S.E. 806, 35 Ga.App. 757.

Single bill

Where a money rule proceeding was brought by one judgment creditor and another judgment creditor intervened, a single bill of exceptions to a judgment, dismissing certiorari to review a decision making the rule absolute by two separate orders, has been held sufficient.—Shouse v. Gober, 167 S.E. 316, 46 Ga. App. 231.

11 C.J. p 220 note 3.

Entry and signing order on petition

The fact that the court enters and signs on the petition for certiorari an order refusing the writ does not constitute such petition a part of the record, and a certified copy of it cannot be brought to the reviewing court as a portion of such record.—Herrington v. City of Valdosta, 192 S.E. 927, 56 Ga.App. 489—Charles v. Bishop, 117 S.E. 275, 30 Ga.App. 242—11 C.J. p 220 note 3 [a] (1).

Verification sufficient

Certification by judge that bill of exceptions containing exact copy of petition was true is sufficient verification of petition for certiorari.—Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Willie, 133 S.E. 44, 35 Ga.App. 202.

Ordering petition made part of record

An order that the refused petition for certiorari be filed and made a part of the record does not make it part of the record, but the petition must be incorporated in a bill of exceptions or verified as a part thereof.—Wiggins v. City of Cordele, 87 S.E. 826, 17 Ga.App. 541—4 C.J. p 169 note 51.

Insufficient identification

An unsanctioned petition for certiorari, not incorporated in the bill of exceptions but specified or sent up as a part of the record, is not sufficiently identified by the mere attaching to the bill of exceptions, and following the judge's certificate, of the paper which purports to be original petition or a copy thereof, with the order refusing sanction.—Hightower v. Davis, 102 S.E. 34, 24 Ga. App. 689.

No answer in record

(1) Where there is no answer in the record, the allegations of the petition are not verified.—Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Griffin, 115 S.E. 276, 29 Ga.App. 357.

(2) On review of judgment rendered by superior court on certiorari, where no answer to the writ is in the record, and in response to order to send up certified copy the clerk certifies that the answer is not in his office, the judgment cannot be reversed, in the absence of any motion to establish a copy of the lost record.—Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Griffin, supra.

Transcript of evidence before tribunal

In proceeding to review resolution of borough's governing body dismissing prosecutor as policeman, where trial justice at argument permitted prosecutor, without objection by defendant-appellant, to supply transcript of testimony taken before governing body, such transcript is part of record on appeal.—Freudenreich v. Mayor and Council of Borough of Fairview, supra.

20. Ill.—Hughes v. Board of Appeals of City of Chicago, 156 N.E. 350, 325 Ill. 109.

The statements in the return to the writ of certiorari must be taken as true where in conflict with the statements of the petition for the writ,²¹ or in conflict with findings of fact by the reviewing court;²² but the facts stated in the application for the writ will be taken as true where not disputed.²³ Also, extrinsic facts set forth in the return will be considered as found to be true where the bill of exceptions contains no recital of evidence,²⁴ and a recital of the judge in his order dismissing the petition for certiorari will be taken as true where the record fails to show anything to the contrary.²⁵

§ 194. Scope and Extent of Review in General

The appellate court will only consider errors which are presented and urged before it and which have been properly preserved for review.

While it has been held in some jurisdictions that the only question to be reviewed on appeal or error is the jurisdiction of the court or tribunal whose proceedings are sought to be reviewed by certiorari,²⁶ it has also been held that after final judgment in the certiorari proceeding, any errors committed by the court in the final judgment, or in ruling adversely to the appellant on interlocutory matters prior to the final judgment, can all be corrected on appeal,²⁷ and a motion to quash a writ of certiorari brought to review a judgment which was alleged to be fraudulently obtained, being an admission that the judgment was fraudulently obtained, the court on appeal can inquire into such judgment and the manner in which it was acquired.²⁸ However, the appellate court will only consider the errors which are presented and urged before it,²⁹ and specially pointed out,³⁰ and the review is also confined to matters or objections urged below, as shown supra § 188, and affidavits or evidence not shown by the record to have been read below, or there acted on, will not be considered.³¹ The court must ascertain the facts from the answer to the writ,³² and extraneous matter in the return made on the writ must be disregarded on appeal.³³

Where a judgment of dismissal was rendered after a hearing on the petition for certiorari, questions which might have been determined on demurrer could be decided on appeal, such questions being presented on a motion to dismiss;³⁴ and where an incidental point was left open by the lower court and the parties on appeal fully presented arguments and requested a decision, the appellate court has held that it could deal with such question as an incident of the main controversy.³⁵ Also, where the ultimate decision would be adverse to the petitioner, the appellate court has assumed in his favor that the case made by the allegations of the petition was before the court for consideration, irrespective of procedural questions involved.³⁶

While the appellate court will pass on the merits where a defect in the certiorari proceedings was not called to the attention of the court below,³⁷ where the lower court did not consider the assignments of error,³⁸ and the only ruling made by the

Legal existence of public body

Where county attacked jurisdiction of state water power and control commission to render decision consenting to creation of county water authority subsequent to resolution whereby county supervisors rescinded resolution creating water authority, and such attack incidentally involved attack on legal existence of water authority, which intervened in county's certiorari proceeding wherein question of legal existence of authority was left open by appellate division, and parties on appeal fully presented arguments and requested decision, court of appeals could deal with such question as incident of main controversy.—Suffolk County v. court below was to quash and dismiss the writ on ground of lack of jurisdiction,³⁹ or to deny the issuance of the writ⁴⁰ on technical objections,⁴¹ the merits of the case cannot be considered on appeal; and on appeal from a refusal of the writ, no determination can be made as to the validity of matters on which the proceedings sought to be reviewed are founded.⁴² Also, if the appeal is from an order denying a motion for a further return, the merits of the controversy are not reviewable.⁴³

Petition filed too late. Where a petition for certiorari was not filed within the required time, the only question for review on appeal was error in reversing the judgment denying a new trial.⁴⁴

Subsequent appeals. A decision on a matter on a prior appeal is the law of the case on all subsequent appeals and will not be reconsidered or re-adjudicated therein.⁴⁵

§ 195. Waiver of Errors

A party may be precluded from assigning error by admissions made in the proceedings or by conduct constituting a waiver thereof.

On a writ of error, where the record is complete and the case has been heard without objection, any irregularity in notifying defendants of the proceedings must be considered as waived.⁴⁶ So, admissions made in the certiorari proceedings may preclude assigning error in connection therewith,⁴⁷ and where dismissal of a petition in certiorari was acquiesced in by the filing of a renewal suit in certiorari before the tendering of a bill of exceptions in the former suit, the right of exception has been regarded as relinquished and the writ of error must be dismissed.⁴⁸ However, an exception to a refusal to dismiss the writ has been held not waived by proceeding to argue on the merits.⁴⁹

§ 196. Presumptions

In the absence of a showing to the contrary, everything necessary to uphold the proceedings in the lower court will be presumed.

The ordinary presumptions on appeals and writs of error in general are applicable,⁵⁰ and everything necessary to uphold the lower court's jurisdiction and the correctness of its proceeding and decision will be presumed, in the absence of a showing to the contrary.⁵¹ Thus, it will be presumed that the certiorari proceedings were regular,⁵² that all the evidence was returned where the writ so commanded,⁵³ that all the facts on which the inferior tribunal acted are disclosed by the record,⁵⁴ and

Uncertainties in answer

Since presumptions always favor verdict and judgment and burden is on him who alleged error to show it, uncertainties and ambiguities in answer to writ of certiorari as made by trial judge must be construed favorably to judgment and to judgment refusing new trial therefrom.—Reese v. Miller, 126 S.E. 904, 33 Ga.App. 442—New Zealand Ins. Co. v. Brewer, 116 S.E. 922, 29 Ga.App. 773.

Objections not sustained below

In certiorari to review action of permanent road commission of a county, in declaring result of road bond election, the court, on appeal from decree affirming validity of election, after eliminating votes cast in certain precincts, will assume that objections made to the entire election, such as noncompliance with Civ.Code 1922 §§ 215, 220, were not sustained, and will not consider such objections.—Smith v. Saye, 125 S.E. 269, 130 S.C. 20.

Jurisdictional facts alleged

On appeal from order quashing certiorari to review county court order excluding land from village, court of appeals must presume that petition recited all necessary jurisdictional facts.—Village of Grandview v. McElroy, 9 S.W.2d 829, 222 Mo.App. 787.

Sufficient facts found

On certiorari to review grant of license to keep inn and tavern in township, it must be assumed by supreme court that court of common pleas on evidence justifying it found that locus in quo contained picnic or recreation ground acre in extent, rendering proper issuance of the license under Act April 8, 1913, Pub. L. p 574.—Deck v. Bell, 102 A. 829, 90 N.J.Law 96, 91 N.J.Law 322.

Waiver of notice that a sufficient reason existed for dismissing the writ, where the bill of exceptions does not show the reason.⁵⁵ On appeal from an order denying the writ, where the matter stands in a situation similar to that presented by a demurrer to the complaint, all the material facts well pleaded in the petition for the writ must be presumed to be true,⁵⁶ and where the record contains no formal return to the alternative writ, other than a demurrer, it must be considered as adopting the allegations of the petition as a return and as a part of the judgment roll.⁵⁷ If the return does not deny the allegations in the writ and the application therefor, the right to sue out the writ will be conclusively presumed;⁵⁸ and, in the absence of the writ, if the parties submitted their case without objection, it will be presumed that the writ was waived or lost.⁵⁹

If a motion to dismiss the writ is based on two grounds, but the order granting it does not state on which ground it is based, it will be presumed that it was granted on both grounds.⁶⁰ However, it has been held that the mere granting of the writ does not raise the presumption, on appeal, that a good excuse was shown for not applying for the writ within the statutory time.⁶¹

Where the writ is denied by the lower court, the legitimate inference, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is that the writ was denied because the court was satisfied with the decision below,⁶² and in some jurisdictions, the statutory presumption as to a reversal being on the facts rather than on the law is applicable.⁶³

§ 197. Discretion of Lower Court

A decision of a court in the exercise of its discretion, where reviewable, will not be interfered with except where an abuse of discretion is clearly shown.

As already stated in § 186 b, discretionary rulings are not appealable in some states; and where an appeal or writ of error is proper, it is the invariable rule that discretionary matters will not be reviewed or interfered with except where an abuse of discretion is clearly shown.⁶⁴ So, if the court has discretion as to the judgment to be rendered on certiorari, such discretion will not be reviewed on appeal or error unless violative of law or the evidence is strongly against it.⁶⁵

Review where disputed questions of fact are also involved is treated infra § 198.

§ 198. Questions of Fact

The findings or decision of the lower court on certiorari will not be disturbed on appeal where based on disputed questions of fact and there is competent or substantial evidence to sustain them.

On appeal from a judgment rendered on certiorari, the appellate court will not disturb the findings of the lower court on disputed questions of fact where they are based on competent or substantial evidence,⁶⁶ nor will the court consider evidence which might have supported some finding

Misconception of law

While a judge may remand the case or give final judgment on certiorari even where the evidence is in conflict in possessory warrant cases, as shown supra § 179, it is the contemplation of the law that he shall exercise a discretion, and where it appears that he has rendered final judgment on a misconception of law and not in the exercise of the discretion vested in him, the judgment will be reversed and remanded for

Finding contrary to evidence

Where evidence is all one way and finding is to contrary, question becomes one of law, reviewable in such proceeding, and decision of inferior tribunal without evidence to support its finding cannot be upheld.—Smith v. Board of Police Com'rs of City of Los Angeles, 36 P.2d 670, 1 Cal. App.2d 292.

which was not made, unless it also supports the finding actually made.⁶⁷

Thus, in Georgia, where no legal questions are involved other than the sufficiency of the evidence, it is uniformly held that the overruling or refusing of a certiorari, on the ground that the evidence is sufficient to support the judgment excepted to, will not be disturbed if there is any evidence supporting such judgment.⁶⁸ Also, unless the judgment rendered is absolutely demanded by the evidence, a decision on certiorari granting a first new trial will not be disturbed,⁶⁹ even though error be involved.⁷⁰ So, the second grant of a new trial will not be reversed where the evidence is overwhelming against the verdict,⁷¹ or where there were errors which in a close case may have been injurious to the losing party.⁷² So, where a petition for certiorari presents questions of law and of fact, and the judge of the superior court sustains the certiorari generally and grants a new trial, the judgment will not be reversed, where no abuse of discretion is shown.⁷³

§ 199. Harmless Error

Harmless errors will be disregarded by the court on appeal.

Mere formal or trivial errors, or errors which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties, will be disregarded.⁷⁴

Judgment sustaining certiorari excepting to judgment affirming denial of new trial was equivalent to first grant of new trial.—Hartsfield Co. v. Ray, 157 S.E. 111, 42 Ga.App. 637.

Decision based on question of law

Unless the verdict was absolutely demanded by the evidence, the first grant of a new trial will not be disturbed although based on a question of law in the determination of which it was unnecessary to consider the evidence.—Johns v. McBride, 112 S.E. 831, 28 Ga.App. 686.

Refusal of continuance

Although the evidence might have demanded the judgment, the granting of certiorari, because of the refusal of a continuance, will not be reversed since the error in refusing the continuance rendered further proceedings nugatory.—Connally Realty Co. v. Nalley, 143 S.E. 786, 38 Ga.App. 292.

No jurisdiction to grant on particular ground

A judgment on certiorari reversing the judgment and granting a first new trial will be affirmed where the verdict and judgment were not demanded as a matter of law, although the judge had no jurisdiction to grant a new trial on the ground that the verdict and judgment were contrary to the weight of the evidence, and although it was error to grant it on the ground that they were unsupported by evidence.—*Gresham v. § 200. Determination and Disposition of Cause

- a. Affirmance
- b. Reversal
- c. Quashing or dismissing appeal
- d. Rendering new judgment

a. Affirmance

Generally where no injustice has been done to appellant the judgment of the lower court on certiorari will be affirmed.

Where it appears that no injustice has been done to appellant, the judgment of the lower court will be affirmed,⁷⁵ as, for example, where the court correctly dismisses the writ, but for a wrong reason;⁷⁶ and, if any of the objections taken to the proceedings were such as to warrant the decision on certiorari, it will not be reversed.⁷⁷ Also, where the record is so incomplete that the court cannot consider the case, the judgment of the lower court overruling the certiorari must stand.⁷⁸ On affirm-ance the appellate court may authorize an application below to vacate the determination appealed from and to amend the writ;⁷⁹ or it may direct the lower court to correct a formal error in its order;⁸⁰ but it has no power to require a further return.⁸¹

b. Reversal

Where the erroneous grant or denial of certiorari is prejudicial, the appellate court will reverse the judgment of the lower court.

While it is not a ground for reversal that a proper judgment was reached in an irregular way,⁸² or that a correct decision was based on erroneous reasoning,⁸³ where the writ of certiorari has been erroneously awarded, the appellate court may give judgment of dismissal,⁸⁴ or it may reverse the judgment and order the inferior court to quash the writ.⁸⁵ Also, where the writ has erroneously been overruled or dismissed, or a verdict on the merits rendered erroneously, the appellate court will render judgment of reversal,⁸⁶ and, where judgment

Order of trial court not affirmed

Although the supreme court w order the writ of certiorari quash on an appeal where its issuance was not proper, it will not order the lower court to affirm the order of the trial court where such order was not a judgment, but merely a ministerial act, such as an order declaring stock law to be in effect.—Patterson v. Adcock, 248 S.W. 904, 157 Ark. 186.
86. Ala.—Independent Pub. Co. v. American Press Assoc., 15 So. 9 102 Ala. 475.—Memphis, etc., R. Co.

for one party is demanded and the error complained of is an error of law which must finally govern the case and no question of fact is involved which makes a new trial necessary, the appellate court will direct the inferior court to sustain the certiorari and enter a final judgment.⁸⁷ Where the lower court, on certiorari, did not determine disputed questions of fact, the upper court, on reversal, may remand the case to the lower court for a consideration of such questions;⁸⁸ but on reversal of a dismissal of the writ, the case will not be remanded where further prosecution of the certiorari is useless.⁸⁹

Remand by intermediate appellate court necessary. Where a judgment overruling certiorari to a ruling of a trial court eliminating a defensive plea is reversed on appeal, and the remittitur was made the judgment of the intermediate court, such court cannot render final judgment for the defendant unless it was shown without dispute that no issue of fact existed or would exist in the trial court as to the eliminated defensive matter,⁹⁰ nor could such intermediate court direct that, if the evidence were substantially the same at the next trial, a verdict be rendered for defendant, as plaintiff would not be precluded from introducing all available legal evidence to meet the stricken defense at a retrial and such court could not determine that there would be no such evidence.⁹¹

c. Quashing or Dismissing Appeal

In a proper case the appeal may be quashed or dismissed.

In some states the appeal may be quashed or dismissed in a proper case.⁹² Thus, where no proper record is brought up on appeal, the appeal will be dismissed;⁹³ and where the court erroneously refused to dismiss the certiorari a writ of error to the overruling of the certiorari will be dismissed.⁹⁴

On appeal in some jurisdictions the appellate court may render final judgment in a proper case.

In some jurisdictions, sometimes by virtue of statutory provisions, on appeal or error to review the dismissal of a certiorari, a final judgment may be rendered.⁹⁵ Thus, where the whole record is before the court on appeal from a judgment setting aside the writ, it has been held that it should be looked into to determine what judgment should be rendered on the merits;⁹⁶ and it has been held that if the irregularity in the judgment does not affect the merits the court will not reverse, but will substitute the proper determination.⁹⁷ However, where certiorari was inappropriately sought, the reviewing court has no power to give relief warranted by the record.⁹⁸

M. COSTS

§ 201. At Common Law

Generally at common law costs were not recoverable.

As in other proceedings, costs are not ordinarily recoverable on certiorari at common law, and hence cannot be awarded unless there is statutory authority therefor.⁹⁹ In one jurisdiction, however, independent of statute, in analogy to writs of error, costs were assessed at an early day against plaintiffs on the affirmance of the proceedings reviewed;¹ but it was also held that, if the proceedings below were quashed, plaintiff was not entitled to costs, independent of statute, on the theory that if a writ of error is sustained it is unjust to subject the defendant to pay costs because of the errors of the inferior court or tribunal,² although the successful party, on issuance of a writ of restitution, is entitled to the costs on that writ.³

§ 202. By Statute

- a. In general
- b. Discretion
- c. Persons liable and persons entitled
- d. Procedure to tax

a. In General

Statutes now generally permit the recovery of costs by the successful party in certiorari proceedings, but the case must be within the letter and intent of the statute.

The allowance of costs in certiorari proceedings is now commonly regulated by statutes which generally permit their recovery by the prevailing party,⁴ but to authorize such a recovery the case must be clearly within the terms of the statute, and, when the case is not within the letter and intent of the statute, costs will not be allowed.⁵

Whether certiorari is an action or a special proceeding is discussed in § 2, and statutes relating to costs in "actions" have been held inapplicable in some jurisdictions,⁶ but in other jurisdictions the contrary has been held.⁷ In any event, it is undoubtedly true that, if one statute relating to costs governs special proceedings and another governs actions, the former authorizes and controls costs in certiorari.⁸

Public question. Under some statutes, where a public question was involved, the decision will be without costs.⁹

On voluntary dismissal. Where, on service of a certiorari, the successful party dismisses the action, it is a confession of error, and the costs of the certiorari will be awarded the petitioner, without regard to whether the case was a proper one for certiorari.¹⁰

Division of costs. Under some statutes a division of costs among the respective parties has been held proper where the court set aside only a portion of the order which was brought up on certiorari.¹¹

Amount. While costs in excess of the amount specified cannot be allowed,¹² where no special provision for the amount of costs to be allowed has been made, the sums allowable on a special proceeding should be awarded,¹³ or the amount recoverable in an action at issue on a question of law,¹⁴ including the necessary disbursements in the proceedings.¹⁵ Generally, only the costs of the reviewing court are awarded.¹⁶

Additional costs. Sometimes, by statute, on dismissal of the writ or affirmance of the judgment below, the court may award interest in addition to costs;¹⁷ but a statute permitting additional costs

n specified cases, where a gross sum is taxable as costs, or on certiorari against a public officer, is inapplicable to certiorari generally, although a stated sum is allowed as costs,¹⁸ and statutory provisions authorizing the award of damages, where it appears to the court that an "appeal" was taken merely for delay, have been held not to include certiorari proceedings.¹⁹

*The losing party cannot recover back the costs paid, although he may finally succeed in the lower court.*²⁰

On certiorari to court of limited jurisdiction. The subject of costs on certiorari to a court of limited jurisdiction is treated in the C.J.S. title Costs §§ 386-403, also 15 C.J. p 290 note 27-p 296 note 42.

b. Discretion

In some jurisdictions the award of costs is discretionary, and they will not be awarded to a party who has unnecessarily sued out the writ, or where he has included matter in the record which was clearly not required for proper presentation of the question.

In many jurisdictions the allowance of costs is discretionary.²¹ In such case they may be refused to a successful party who has unnecessarily sued out the writ instead of pursuing other available remedies,²² or where the award will entail hardship;²³ nor will they be awarded against plaintiff, when a material error is corrected.²⁴ So the court may require the successful party to pay the costs of printing the record where most of the matter which was included at his instance was clearly not required for a proper presentation of the question submitted;²⁵ and if neither party prevails, there being a cross writ, each party must pay his own costs.²⁶

Correction of error after issuance of the writ. The right to costs is not taken away by the correction of the error complained of after the issuance of the writ.²⁷

c. Persons Liable and Persons Entitled

Generally the inferior tribunal and its members are not liable for costs, the general practice being to tax costs against the real respondents in interest.

Officers, such as county commissioners, highway commissioners, tax assessors, and the like have been held not liable for costs on the quashal of their proceedings, unless they have acted corruptly or with intention to oppress;²⁸ and in such a case the costs may be awarded against the persons²⁹ or political subdivision³⁰ on whose behalf such board acted. Furthermore, costs cannot be taxed against a court,³¹ and a statute authorizing costs in certiorari proceedings is to be construed as meaning that the costs shall be taxed for or against the real party in interest,³² and it seems to be the practice to tax costs against the real respondents in interest, although they were not cited in, and the writ was directed only to the court or tribunal whose action is sought to be reviewed.³³ A penal statute relating to costs has been held not to authorize a trial court to assess the costs of a transcript of a stenographer against the public treasury in a civil case between private parties.³⁴ In any event, it would seem that an inferior court or tribunal should not be charged with costs, where the excess of jurisdiction arises from a mere honest mistake of judgment, but that the costs in all such cases should be taxed against the person who is responsible for the illegal act or the excess of jurisdiction by procuring it to be done;³⁵ and this is so although the persons in interest are not parties to the record in the certiorari proceedings.³⁶

Amicus curiæ. Disbursements of an attorney, whose brief for clients not parties to the certiorari proceeding was received only as a brief of amicus curiæ, have been held not taxable against the parties to the proceeding.³⁷

Court as entitled to costs. While a statute providing for the taxation of costs in favor of the prevailing party of such items as witness fees and other necessary expenses has been held not to authorize the awarding of such costs to a court which was the respondent, for the reason that the court itself cannot make any disbursements and therefore cannot collect any,³⁸ under a statute providing for the recovery of costs when a decision of a court of inferior jurisdiction in a special proceeding is brought before a court of higher jurisdiction for review, it has been held that the inferior court could recover the costs of the preparation and certification of its return.³⁹

d. Procedure to Tax

Unless otherwise provided by statute, the procedure to tax costs in certiorari proceedings is the same as in other civil cases.

In taxing the costs, the procedure undoubtedly is the same as in other civil cases, unless it is otherwise provided by statute,⁴⁰ and if the amount is required to be fixed by the court the clerk cannot tax any costs without an order from the court so to do.⁴¹ It follows that, where a judgment of reversal makes no provision as to costs, a special application should be made therefor;⁴² and if the real persons in interest are not parties to the certiorari proceeding, but they are liable for costs because of their interest, the proper practice would seem to be to bring them in by proper notice on motion to tax the costs in the proceeding.⁴³

An application to the appellate court to tax attorney's fees as costs cannot be considered where no judgment was rendered and the adverse party is not before the court.⁴⁴

§ 203. Motion Costs

With regard to the right to costs on motions in certiorari proceedings, the general rules as to costs on motions are applicable.

In so far as the right to costs on motions to quash the writ is concerned, the general rules as to costs on motions are applicable.⁴⁵ Thus, where a motion to quash a writ of certiorari is denied pending amendments removing the grounds of such motion, such denial should be without costs;⁴⁶ but petitioners in certiorari who allow a misnomer of parties to appear in the printed record, although they are correctly named in the original, will be held responsible for costs of a motion to dismiss based on the defect of parties apparent in the printed record.⁴⁷

As precursor of distress

"Distresses seem to have originated from two more ancient remedies of the common law. By the process of gavellet and cessavit the landlord could seize the land itself for rent in arrear, and hold it until payment was made. These processes have been obsolete for ages, and exist only in the memory of legal antiquaries. When they fell into disuse, distresses appear to have arisen, whereby instead of seizing the land, the lord seized all the movables upon the land, and held them until he received payment. In process of time, he was authorized by statute to make sale of them, and in this way we have the modern distraint. As it is not an execution for debt, the goods of the tenant have never been held to be protected by any of the exemption laws which put the property of a debtor beyond the reach of his creditors."—Emig v. Cunningham, 62 Md. 458, 461.
